TWO NATIONS CLASP HANDS

FRANCE JOINS AMERICA IN NATION'S CAPITAL.

TRIBUTES TO OUR BRAVE ALLY

PRESIDENT AND OTHERS MAKE ADDRESSES.

Washington, May 24.—The president of the United States today joined with the official representatives of the French republic in unveiling the statue of Marshal De Rochambeau, the compatriot of Washington and the commander-in-chief of the French forces in America during the revolutionary war. It was an event combining many demonstrations of international good will, with French sailors from the battleship Gaulois mingling their cheers with American blue-jackets, French flags entwining their folds with the stars and stripes and with oratory and music expressive of Franco-American friendship.

The ceremony of unveiling was fixed for 11 o'clock this morning, but long before that hour the streets were filled with marching men and with a great crowd eager to witness the exercises and review. A battalion of French seamen arrived by special train from Annapolis early in the day and headed by the crack band from the French battleship, swung through Pennsylvania avenue to Lafayette square, where the shrouded figure of the French field marshal awaited the signal for unveiling.

FIGHTERS FRATERNIZE.

The American soldiers, sailors and marines already had assembled and gave their French brothers-in-arms a hearty welcome. The American troops were under command of Major General S. B. M. Young and embraced a battalion of engineers, a battalion of sailors and marines, with the marine band, a battalion of cavalry and of field artillery and a brigade of national guardsmen of the District of Columbia, representing in all the various branches of the United States military and naval service.

President Roosevelt and the members of the cabinet arrived at the unveiling stand shortly before 11 o'clock and took position immediately facing the draped figure. Alongside the presidential party sat the French ambassador, M. Cambon, General Brugere, Vice Admiral Fournier and other distinguished representatives of the French government, and also the Count and Countess De Rochambeau and Count De Lafayette, descendants of the gallant soldiers who fought with Washington.

Cardinal Gibbons was to have opened the exercises with an invocation, but in his unavoidable absence the Rev. Dr. Stafford delivered an impressive opening prayer.

PRESIDENT SPEAKS.

At its conclusion President Roosevelt stepped to the front of the platform and extended a generous welcome to the French guests.

The president spoke as follows:

"Mr. Ambassador and you, the representatives of the mighty republic of France: I extend to you on behalf of the people of the United States the warmest and most cordial greeting.

"We appreciate to the full all that is implied in this embassy, composed of such men as those who have been sent over here by President Loubet to commemorate the unveiling of the statute of the great marshal who, with the soldiers and sailors of France, struck the decisive blow in the war which started this country on the path of independence among the nations of the earth. (Applause.) I am sure that I give utterance to the sentiments of every citizen of the United States, of every American to whom the honor and the glory of our republic in the past, as in the present, are dear, when I say that we prize this fresh proof of the friendship of the French people, not only because it is necessarily pleasing to us to have the friendship of a nation so mighty in war and so mighty in peace as France has ever shown herself to be, but because it is peculiarly pleasant to feel that, after a century and a quarter of independent existence as a nation, the French republic should feel that in that century and a quarter we have justified the sacrifices France made on our behalf. (Applause.)

"I am sure my fellow citizens that you welcome the chance which brings it about that this embassy of the French people should come to our shores at the very time when we, in our turn, have done our part in starting on the path of independence a sister republic—the republic of Cuba. (Applause.)

"Mr. Ambassador, the American people, peculiarly because they are the American people and because the history of the United States has been so interwoven with what France has done for us; also because they are proud of the whole world which acknowledges and must ever acknowledge in a peculiar degree the headship of France along so many lines in the march of progress and civilization—the American people, through me, extend their thanks to you and in their name I beg to express my acknowledgements to the embassy that has come here and to President Loubet and all of the French nation, both for the deed and for the magnanimous spirit that lay behind the doing of the deed and I thank you." (Loud applause.)

As the president closed his remarks, the Countess De Rochambeau drew aside the veil enveloping the figure, bringing into view the massive bronze proportions of the famous French commander, standing proudly erect with arm outstretched, directing the fortunes of war on the field of Yorktown. A great cheer went up from Frenchmen and Americans alike, and at the same instant the marine band broke into the inspiring strains of the Marseillaise. As the French national hymn died away, Ambassador Cambon escorted to the front of the platform the youthful sculptor, M. Hamar, who executed the statue.

M. CAMBON SPEAKS.

Then the ambassador, speaking in French, delivered a brief address. He said in part:

"Today, just as they did one hundred and twenty years ago, the soldiers and sailors of France and of the United States stand side by side; they surround this monument; they march under one and the same command; they blend in one common chord their national hymns, and in celebrating their common glory they give the world an example of fidelity in friendship.

"This friendship you have proven to us. The French Antilles have just suffered the shock of a tragic event, of a catastrophe the like of which the world had not witnessed for twenty centuries. The president of the United States, congress and the American people have vied with promptness to send relief to our stricken countrymen. Permit me to avail myself of this solemn occasion and to thank publicly, in the name of my government and country, you yourself, Mr. President, and the entire population of these United States.

"You have shown by this act that something new had taken birth between the nations, that they might be united by a bond of disinterested sympathy and of mutual good will, and these ideals of justice and of liberty for which our fathers fought and bled together one hundred and twenty years since, had really borne fruit in the hearts of men."

NEARLY 200 DEAD

THE FERNIE MINE DISASTER GROWS IN HORROR.

NO HOPE FOR ENTOMBED MEN

ALL MUST HAVE PERISHED INSTANTLY.

RESCUE WORK IS DIFFICULT

AFTER-DAMP OF EXPLOSION DRIVES MEN OUT.

Fernie, B. C., May 24.—The loss of life in the Coal Creek mines on Thursday is even greater than was at first reported. It is now estimated that from 150 to 175 men met almost instant death. Supt. E. Drennan, Dr. Bennett and True Weatherby were the first to enter the mine. When about 500 feet into the working Drennan was overcome by afterdamp and had it not been for his two companions would have perished. On being removed to the outer air he recovered and gave instructions to the rescuing party to commence repairing the pipes which conduct the air through the mine as they had been almost completely destroyed. It was impossible to enter owing to the afterdamp which prevailed.

VOLUNTEERS SPRING TO WORK.

Volunteers were called for and a score of men sprang to the work. Every few minutes the men would collapse and were borne to the outer air, but their places were quickly filled by fresh volunteers. The first body recovered was taken from No. 3 mine about 11 o'clock and was that of Willie Robertson, a lad of 13. Several hours elapsed and then three more bodies were recovered. None of the victims gave the slightest signs of life.

At 4 a. m. the relief parties had penetrated so far that the gas became unbearable and operations had to be suspended for an hour or two.

Many acts of bravery were witnessed during the night.

THE DEAD.

The dead so far recovered are:
Steve Morgan.
Joe Sangala.
Willie Robertson.
Victor Johnson.
John Leadbeater.
Frank Salter.
John McLeod.
T. Fearfull.
T. Johnson, and a miner, whose name is unknown.

The mine is free from fire and the bodies will be removed as fast as the afterdamp is cleared.

The town is horror-stricken and heart-rending scenes meet the eye on every side. All day the trains to the mine have been crowded with anxious friends and relatives of the imprisoned men, hurrying to the scene of the disaster.

A meeting of the board of trade has been called to organize a relief fund for the sufferers.

The cause of the accident is unknown, but the opinion of many is that it was the result of a heavy shot from one of the machines.

WILL BE DEDICATED JUNE 8

NEW METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT POE.

Pretty Structure Has Just Been Completed at a Cost of $5,000—An Old Congregation.

The handsome new Methodist Episcopal church at Poe, this county, is nearing completion, and the edifice will be formally dedicated on Sunday, June 8. The service promises to be a noteworthy one in that section of Allen county.

Services will be held at 10 o'clock a. m., and 3:40 p. m., and Rev. Dr. W. D. Parr, formerly pastor of Wayne street church in this city, will deliver the dedicatory sermon. A feature of the day will be an elaborate dinner served in the old church building, and following this feast a free-will offering will be taken.

The M. E. society of Poe, or Williamsport, as it is sometimes called, is one of the oldest congregations in this section, having been organized in 1835. For many years services were held in school houses and at the homes of the members. In 1867 the first church was erected, and here the people worshiped until less than a year ago, when the old building was moved back to make way for the new building soon to be dedicated.

The new church is a brick veneer, of pleasing architectural appearance, and is nicely furnished. It includes an auditorium and class room, with a total seating capacity of about 300 people, and the contractors were Levi Griffith & Son, of Fort Wayne. The board of trustees had charge of the work of building, and this board is made up of Messrs. W. H. Summers, A. O. Hadley, Nathan Snyder, S. W. Summers, P. H. Snyder, Marion Smith and Jud Emerick. The cost of the building was about $5,000. The appointment is a part of the Hoagland charge, and the pastor is Rev. Carey. Other ministers who will assist in the dedicatory services are Rev. R. C. Jones, of Huntertown, and Rev. W. E. Murray, of Churubusco, both of whom were former pastors of the Poe congregation.

HE IS WARMLY WELCOMED.

No more hearty greeting has ever been given a speaker in Fort Wayne than that accorded Col. Isaac W. Brown, the bird and bee man, by the boys and girls in the public schools of this city. Col. Brown has already made addresses at eight of the city school buildings, and will conclude the work early the coming week. Monday forenoon he will speak at the Hamilton and the South Wayne schools and Monday afternoon at Lakeside. Tuesday morning will be given to the high school. Col. Brown knows the birds and bees of Indiana, but he knows the young people also. He talks to them in a manner that they can comprehend, and never fails to hold the closest attention of every pupil. His is an important part of educational work, and there is every indication that his work in this city has been invaluable.

SUCCEEDS DR. M'COMB.

Dr. D. C. Wybourn, of Monroeville, has purchased the residence of the late Dr. W. S. McComb, at Sheldon, and will succeed the latter in practice at that point. Dr. Wybourn is a recent graduate of the Fort Wayne College of Medicine, and is a young man of much promise. He will ship his goods to Sheldon Monday and begin practice immediately.

GIVES CLOSING RECEPTION.

Invitations are being issued for the closing reception of the Muiqueen Dancing academy, which will be given at the academy Thursday evening, May 29. This is preliminary to the final closing dance at Robison park pavilion Thursday, June 5, and both events promise to be of unusual interest. The Annex orchestra will furnish music.

A DIPLOMAT DIES

LORD PAUNCEFOTE PASSES AWAY IN WASHINGTON.

WAS BRITISH AMBASSADOR

HAD LONG BEEN ILL, THOUGH DEATH WAS UNEXPECTED.

OFFICIAL ACTION IS TAKEN

CAREER OF DISTINCTION IN DIPLOMACY.

Washington, D. C., May 24.—Lord Pauncefote, British ambassador to the United States, died at the embassy this morning at 5:35 o'clock.

The improvement which had been noted in his condition during the past week received a sudden check about 6 o'clock last evening, when it was noticed that he was experiencing difficulty in breathing. Dr. Jung, his physician, was immediately sent for and he decided upon a consultation with a local physician, in the meantime telegraphing for Dr. Osler, of Baltimore. In his stead came Dr. Thayer, of Johns Hopkins university, arriving about 2 o'clock this morning.

DANGER UNSUSPECTED.

The patient's pulse was still good and when Dr. Thayer left the embassy at 3 o'clock for Baltimore the ambassador was resting so comfortably that a cablegram was sent to his son-in-law, Mr. Bromley, in London, that there was no immediate danger.

Soon after 3 o'clock a distinct weakness of the heart developed and his pulse began to collapse. He died so peacefully that it surprised even his physician, who feared that the asthmatic affection would prove troublesome when the end came.

At the bedside when the distinguished diplomat passed away were Mrs. Pauncefote, the Honorable Maude Pauncefote, Miss Sibyl and Miss Audrey, Dr. Jung and Mr. Bedford, one of the clerks attached to the embassy.

No arrangements of any kind have been made for the funeral.

As soon as it became generally known that Lord Pauncefote was dead flags were half-masted over the different embassies and legations. At the Arlington hotel, where the visiting Frenchmen who have come to witness the Rochambeau statue unveiling are stopping, the French flag was placed at half-mast.

MR. HAY SEES PRESIDENT.

The news of Lord Pauncefote's death brought Secretary of State Hay to the white house shortly after 9 o'clock, and he spent some time with the president considering what action should be taken by this government. After the conference it was announced that the president would call at the British embassy immediately after the unveiling ceremonies to offer his personal condolences and ascertain the wishes of Lord Pauncefote's family in regard to the further plans. The president also sent a letter of condolence to Lady Pauncefote. Immediately after the unveiling ceremonies the flag on the white house was placed at half-mast. Mrs. L. Z. Leiter, who was to have given a reception in honor of the French delegation this afternoon, has called it off on account of Lord Pauncefote's death, and it is very likely that the French ambassador also will recall the invitations to his reception tonight.

Secretary Hay sent condolences to the Marquise of Lansdowne, in London. Later he called at the British embassy, as did President Roosevelt.

LORD PAUNCEFOTE'S CAREER.

The Right Honorable Lord Pauncefote, of Preston, G. C. B., G. C. M. G., the first ambassador to the United States and dean of the diplomatic corps in Washington, was born in Munich, Bavaria, 74 years ago and was the issue of one of the most ancient of British families, whose history is founded in the Doomsday book. Educated as a lawyer, his governmental service began in Hongkong as attorney general in 1865, and after much valuable colonial experience he came to Washington in 1889, first as minister and afterward as first ambassador. His service here has been one unbroken record of successful diplomacy. The Bering sea negotiations were among his earliest works of importance and it was his familiarity with that difficult subject that lead to his selection by the foreign office for the post at Washington. The arbitration treaty negotiated with Secretary Olney was the forerunner of the great work accomplished at The Hague, and it may be said that it embodied some of the most important principles of the great general convention regulating arbitration afterwards framed by The Hague conference. Then came a number of reciprocity treaties and arrangements involving a vast amount of study and work, all of which were perfected as far as the executive branch of our government could co-operate with Lord Pauncefote. Soon after Secretary Hay assumed office Lord Pauncefote began the task which he himself regarded as the greatest accomplishment of his busy life, namely to forever set at rest the questions growing out of the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty and he entered with energy again upon negotiations, the result of which was the framing of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty recently ratified. For these valuable services the British government did Lord Pauncefote the honor to three times extend the term of his service at Washington, which would otherwise have ceased when he attained the age of 70 years.

LONDON IS SHOCKED.

London, May 24.—The news of the death of Lord Pauncefote, the British ambassador at Washington, this morning, was conveyed by a representative of the Associated Press to the British foreign office and the United States embassy. The officials were greatly shocked and expressed the deepest sympathy with the widow and a realization of the loss which both countries have sustained. The foreign office representatives were particularly affected as, apparently, they had no idea that the ambassador's condition had been critical. No action will be taken, in all probability, except the sending of private messages of condolence, before Monday next.

CASE TRANSFERRED HERE.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 24.—(Special.)—The case against William W. Steiner, of Wells county, indicted by the federal grand jury for counterfeiting, has been transferred to the federal court at Fort Wayne. It is claimed that Steiner, who is a young farmer, manufactured a lot of bogus nickels and gave them to other boys to pass. Judge Baker will hold a brief session of court at Fort Wayne beginning June 10.

Words cannot express my gratitude for your valuable medicine. I used to have four or five fits a day and even eight before the early part of every month. I have recommended Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic in many cases that came under my observation while stationed at Isadore, Mich., and in all cases it had the desired effect, and especially so with Mrs. J. ## CLOSING ENTERTAINMENT

MISS HANKER'S CLASSES AT WAYNE CLUB.

Very Pretty Program of Fancy Dances Given by Younger Pupils Last Evening.

The fifth annual entertainment and dance given by Miss Hanker and her pupils took place last evening at the Wayne club before a large audience, composed mostly of the relatives and friends of the young people and a number of Miss Hanker's adult pupils.

The opening number was a floral ballet danced by Anna Dondero, Irene Waters, Clara Hassler, Freda Piper, Blanche Triskett, Helen Pauley, Elizabeth Porter, Jane Meriwether, Grace Parisot, Irene Ryan, Bertha Gilbert, Myrtle Graeder, Italia Evans, Edna Heit, Flora Cook, Edna Perrine, Marion Purcell, Helen Miller, Ruth Wheelock, Geraldine Bulson and Helen McGee.

A number of boys held gaily decorated hoops, through which the girls stepped in executing the figures. The hoop bearers were Roger Dailey, Howard Howey, Fred Heham, Walter Barnett, Ralph Rush, Don O'Rourke and Eugene Bulson.

Following the floral ballet was a figure entitled, "Sailors En Forte," executed by nine little men dressed in white sailor costumes, with blue facings. The boys who took part were Ralph Rush, Don O'Rourke, Walter Barnett, Maynard Durfee, Fred Heham, Howard Howey, Jim Meriwether, Roger Dailey and Eugene Bulson. Theodore Fisher was captain. Miss Irene Waters executed a Polish dance in a pretty costume of blue velvet, trimmed with fur. The Lancashire clog, a dance requiring much skill of foot, was cleverly danced by Flora Cook.

A Dutch wooden shoe dance came next and it was executed "with excellent interpretation" by fourteen young people in Dutch costume. Miss Freda Piper followed with a buck and wing dance which was very cleverly done. Marion Purcell, one of the cleverest child dancers in the city, sang and danced in a pretty costume of pink, with white hat.

The buck and wing dance by Willie Vesey, Harry Clark, Maurice Pauley, Otis Volz, Maynard Durfee and Theodore Fisher was one of the hits of the evening and the boys responded to the encore with a burlesque ballet, entering thoroughly into the spirit of the dance. The lads were abbreviated skirts, flaxen wigs and beflowered hats. Miss Flora Cook came next in a tambourine dance, which she executed very gracefully. The Japanese fan dance by Italia Evans, Flora Cook, Edna Perrine, Helen McGee, Ethel Mariotte, Bertha Gilbert, Helen Miller and Edna Hite was very pretty.

The next was a very difficult step dance by Theodore Fisher. Master Fisher was the star performer of the entertainment and his dancing was very clever. A skirt dance by Flora Cook and a waltz clog by Irene Waters followed and the concluding number of the evening, a skirt dance, was given. The closing dance was one of the best of the evening and the girls who took part executed the figures faultlessly.

The entertainment was undoubtedly the best ever given by Miss Hanker and the graceful dancing of the children reflects much credit on her ability as a teacher. At the conclusion of the program the children danced the Peerless, Florodora and one or two other numbers, after which the older pupils pre-empted the ball room and danced a program of eighteen numbers, music being furnished by the Annex orchestra.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHORUS CONCERT.

A Musical Treat Next Friday.

The concert to be given at the Temple next Friday evening by the pupils of the High school will be a novelty in the way of local amusements. Two hundred voices have been carefully trained and have reached that degree of perfection that it will undoubtedly excel any work of the kind ever given in this city. The purity, freshness and quality of the tone production in the High school chorus, together with a great volume and harmonious blending of voices is what marks their singing as second to none of any similar body of singers in the country. A skillful and widely experienced master, in the person of Prof. Miles, shows the wisdom exercised in selecting a leader. Notably among the pieces on the program is the late Sir Arthur Sullivan's composition, "The Lost Chord." It is said that more copies of this piece have been sold than any composition ever written, Sir Arthur having received a royalty of $50,000 for the first edition alone. Other choruses will be the bridal song from Cowen's "Rose Maiden." "The Heavens are Telling," from Haydn's "Creation." Mozart's Gloria from the 12th Mass. The Tannhauser triumphal chorus and the great soldiers chorus from Gounod's opera "Faust." The prices for admission, including a reserved seat, will be 25 and 50 cents and the box office will open Wednesday morning, May 28 at 8 o'clock, for the benefit of scholars who do not wish to miss their lessons.

INTERESTING MEDAL CONTEST.

Miss Virginia Philley, daughter of Hiram Philley, won the silver medal contest given under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at Plymouth Congregational church last evening. There were but two other contestants, Flossie Albers and Minnie Shoemaker. The judges were Rev. J. W. Bailey, Rev. E. W. Allen and Rev. J. K. Walts.

SOUTH WAYNE PEOPLE SPEAK

WANT STREET CAR SERVICE AT ANY COST.

Question of Fare Not so Important—Held a Meeting and Named a Committee.

At an open-air meeting held last evening at Park avenue and Broadway, residents of South Wayne gave expression to their views in the matter of street car extensions. The people of the Sixth ward want extensions south from Creighton avenue, reaching a part of the city now remote from the street railway tracks.

Fully one hundred property owners and residents of that section of the city were present, as was also an earnest delegation from the Ninth ward, who are laboring for similar service on the north side. E. W. Lewis was appointed chairman of the meeting and the whole situation was discussed freely in an extended session.

It is the concensus of opinion in the south part of the city that the extension of the tracks is of first importance, and there is little disposition to quibble over the question of fare. There is a concerted demand for the service, and an appeal will be made to the city council to provide the necessary franchise for the traction company upon some fair basis and do it quickly. This appeal to the city council will be in the form of resolutions to be prepared by a committee composed of W. S. Wells, Mr. Anderson, Fred McCracken, A. B. Crowe and F. J. Young. Another meeting will be held Monday evening at 7:30, probably at Beaver chapel, to hear the report of the committee. The meeting last evening passed a vote of thanks to the Ninth ward residents for their presence.

MANY NEW COTTAGES.

Rome City, May 24.—There is an unusual amount of building in progress around Sylvan lake, most of it by Fort Wayne people. When the new buildings are completed the resort will have 275 cottages, many of them expensive summer homes. G. J. Mills is building three cottages, one to cost $2,500. R. T. Dawson is building an antique log cabin. William O'Rourke, who owns Gem island, a little spot in the center of Sylvan lake, is erecting a stone cottage there. Other Fort Wayne citizens who are building this year, are: Kenneth Larwill, Mrs. Fred Meyers, Miss Emma Becker, J. H. Hartman, Mrs. Nestle, J. H. Bickel, Davis and Kanning, George DeWald, J. B. # WOMAN'S POWER

Perfection of Form, Feature, and Mind Render Women All-Powerful. Health, However, the Greatest Charm.

Woman's greatest gift is the power to inspire admiration, respect, and love. There is a beauty in health which is more attractive to men than mere regularity of features.

The snap and spirit which health gives to the eye, the movement, and the speech are full of magnetism.

Sickly women can't understand this.

They only know that they are miserable, and their efforts to be attractive are languid and weak.

Woman's influence in the world is limited by her strength, and the strength of health is real strength.

It brings with it beauty and grace and loveliness of disposition.

To be a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, should be a woman's constant study. If she would be all she may, she must guard well against the signs of ill health.

Regular and painless menstruation is absolutely necessary.

The help which Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gives to women who are attacked by any disorder of the feminine organism is real, permanent help. It cures all weaknesses of the organs and makes it possible for women to retain their health and beauty to maturity.

Mrs. Pinkham advises women who are ill free of cost. Address her at Lynn, Mass. Thousands owe their health to her.

A Boston Woman's Experience.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel very grateful to you for the benefit I derived from your kind advice and remedies. I was troubled with a complication of female troubles, had ovaritis, painful and irregular menstruation, leucorrhea, nervousness and weakness. I had no appetite and could not sleep nights. The least exertion would cause shortness of breath and dull pains in my hips and side. The doctors all advised me to have an operation and have one of my ovaries removed, but this I could not bear to think of. I was induced to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking the first bottle I was much improved. It renewed my appetite, health and strength. I continued taking it, also your Blood Purifier and Sanative Wash until entirely cured of all my troubles. The pains have never returned and my health is splendid. Your remedies have been a boon to me and I am sure many a woman owes her life to them."—MAUDE WEBB, 356 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass. (March 15, 1901.)

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement.

No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles or such hosts of grateful friends. Remember this when you go to buy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

$5000 REWARD.—We have deposited with the National City Bank of Lynn, $5000, which will be paid to any person who can find that the above testimonial letter is not genuine, or was published before obtaining the writer's special permission. Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

THE CORK OR THE DOOR BELL?

Calling the doctor is a comparatively easy thing for the rich and well-to-do. But how about the man who has to stop and count the cost? Health is an absolute necessity for the wage-earner but—how can he afford to ring the doctor's door-bell every time that sickness shows its head? Isn't there a middle course? Earnestly and emphatically we say there is.

Arrangements have been completed for two games to be played between the Shamrocks, of this city, and the South Whitley Grays at South Whitley on Decoration day. The South Whitley sports will import several league players and the majority of the Marion team to defeat the Fort Wayne boys, if such a thing is possible. ### "BLUE MONDAY."

No Use for It Any More.

How good food put a good minister on his feet again is an interesting story. He says: "A little more than a year ago I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food. At that time I had been suffering from dyspepsia for about five years. I had tried all the remedies my friends told me about, but with no permanent relief.

"My Sabbath duties at that time nearly prostrated me and the following day I was of no use to myself or to anyone else.

"After beginning the food a change began to take place and gradually the dyspepsia and disturbance left me. Now I have gained twenty pounds and am free from stomach troubles that I suffered so long from.

"I can do twice the amount of work with ease, am well all of the time, and naturally sing the praises of the delicious food that has put me right. I am perfectly willing to have my name appear as endorsing your excellent food for I know from personal experience of its value." L. B. Danforth, pastor of the First M. E. church, Haverhill, Mass.

"I was very poorly and could hardly get about the house. Then I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and only two bottles of it made me feel perfectly well." Mrs. N. S. Swinney, Princeton, Mo.

Croker sloped, Nixon quit and the remaining leaders of Tammany have split. May be the day of jubilee is coming down a by-path.

The concensus of opinion expressed in most of the republican newspapers of the state appears to be that two years hence the Eleventh congressional district may look appealingly to Major George Washington Steel to come to the rescue.

Of course there are to be inquiries and probings and in event of great stress of critical emergency some resolutions, perhaps, in connection with the water famine. But the famine is said to be here. The vaudeville should have been pulled off months ago when it might have done good.

It will be a ceremony of unusual local interest that is to take place at the Tippecanoe club next Wednesday evening when a portrait of the late Hon. Hugh McCulloch is to be presented to that club by Mr. Charles McCulloch, son of the lamented financier. Hon. Hugh McCulloch was one of the most distinguished public men that ever went from Indiana. Certainly, in the character and magnitude of his public services most eminent who ever went from Fort Wayne. In this connection it is fitting that the formal acceptance of this portrait of Fort Wayne's most distinguished dead should be undertaken by the most eminent of Fort Wayne's living and it was a very happy thought which caused choice for this duty to fall upon Judge Robert S. Taylor.

To Rochambeau a monument certainly. Most eminently it is a true desert of the memory of our great revolutionary ally. And one likewise to Count De Grasse, who brought a fleet that made Yorktown possible. But while we are building monuments to the brave Europeans who aided us in battle to win the good fight, let us not forget Baron Steuben. Save for the matchless leadership and supreme military genius Washington gave to the colonies no other martial personage contributed so much to the effectiveness of the colonial arms as Baron Steuben. From the victorious fields which immortalized the martial renown of the great Frederick came Steuben. He was the drillmaster, the organizer, the constructive master who licked the raw colonials into disciplined soldiers. He came because his heart had preceded him and he stayed after it was all over, because he loved the country he helped to make free. To Steuben a monument.

It is folly to suppose and it is fatuous to believe that the limit of progress has been reached in the economies of street railway operation. To think so is to argue against progress. A decade or two will witness a wonderful stride in electrical motive appliances. Improvement means economy and of that economy the people of this city have a right to share in common with all other people. To fasten upon this city for forty years the condition of approximately five cents for street car fare will be to inflict a great wrong upon the people. If the improvements and extensions now asked for by the Traction company are granted the street railway situation will be sealed forever. Competition will be effectually blocked even as a remote possibility and the people can get such concessions and favors only as the proprietary corporation may choose in its generosity to bestow. And the generosity of corporations is not as a general thing a very substantial bulwark between the people and extortion. The time to settle these matters is now.

HAS NOW FOUNDED A CHURCH

VERSATILE PROF. N. HILL NESBITT IN A NEW ROLE.

Former Teacher of French in Partnership With a Woman in the New Venture.

Prof. N. Hill Nesbitt, who will be remembered in Fort Wayne as a teacher of French and was later brought into unpleasant prominence on account of his alleged disregard of the marriage vows, has now appeared in a new role. He and a Mrs. Griswold have founded a new church at Kansas City, to be known as "The Church of the New Commandments," and the two are to be co-pastors.

Prof. Nesbitt cut a rather conspicuous figure in Fort Wayne for a time and was well received. Later he dropped into disrepute, was given his walking papers from Winona assembly and drifted off to parts unknown, abandoning his wife at Indianapolis.

The new creed of which Nesbitt seems to be the founder in Kansas City is apparently sexless. It will have, as a Kansas City paper states, "sermonettes" instead of the regular discourses, and there will be two of them at each service. It will, as its founders declare, not conflict with any other church. One of the conditions of membership is that they will not withdraw from their present religious affiliations. Mr. Nesbitt and Mrs. Griswold will teach "advanced ideas," comprehended largely under the caption of "new thought." They will heal disease and make no charge for their services. They will support themselves by collections and aim only to secure collections which will be sufficient to live upon. They will devote much time to charitable work without ostentation. They will, so they say, follow the footsteps of the Master and they will teach the right way to live.

BAND CONCERT.

WOLFF BROS. INAUGURATE A POPULAR FEATURE.

Last evening Wolffs gave to the people an open air concert from the balcony erected in front of their store. The program consisted of ten numbers in all, eight numbers by Wolff's Military Band and two vocal selections by Mr. Gus Wefel, one of Fort Wayne's leading singers. The audience was very large and the applause given the musicians was generous. It is probable that these popular entertainments by this progressive store will be a regular feature of the summer. The program was arranged and superintended by Mr. Harry Corazzi, the genial manager of the store.

RAINS GIVE SOME RELIEF

WATER IN THE RESERVOIR HAS GONE UP.

Council Considers Water Question in Special Session—Committee Will Investigate.

The heavy rain of last evening and night did considerable to relieve the immediate water emergency, and with careful economy it is possible that the city may be able to pull through until the new pumping machinery can be installed. At 7 o'clock this morning the level in the reservoir was thirteen feet low, showing a gain of eleven feet since last night, when it was twenty-four feet low. Tomorrow the waste will be considerable less than on a week day and it is probable that by Monday morning the reservoir can be filled.

The city council met last night in special session pursuant to the call of the mayor to discuss the situation. All the members were present except Ehrman, Miller and O'Ryan, as were the members of the board of trustees. The discussion was general and practically every person had something to say. The mayor stated simply that the city was threatened by a water famine, and that while discussion could not increase the supply, suggestions might be made which would offer some mode of making the supply at hand go a little farther. The trustees reported that the Ross street station was again working, the break in the pipes having been located and repaired. Engineer Baxter stated that there would be some delay in connecting the new pipe lines and the wells, but that said delay would not be serious. Member Lennon suggested that a great saving could be made by cutting off the heavy consumers and stopping the street sprinklers. It was suggested that the city should shut off Lindenwood altogether until after the danger had passed and the new pumps put in. Finally, on motion, Members Scheid, Hosey, Bauer, Glenn and Meier were appointed a special committee to make an immediate investigation and report at the next meeting. This committee will meet tomorrow morning and will go over the entire system and make such further investigation of conditions as may be suggested.

Mayor Berghoff says that there is no doubt in his mind that much water is being absolutely wasted every day. As an instance, he said he went to the city hall the other day—on the day following his proclamation first calling on everybody to economize in the use of water, and while there made a personal inspection of the building and found three taps turned on in full and the water running to waste from three places in the city building. After leaving the city building he went home to dinner, and found one tap at his home running at the rate of about ten gallons a minute. His idea is that the trustees should hire two men, whose sole duty should be to inspect water connections and prevent waste. He thinks such men could be hired for anywhere from $50 to $100 per month and that the money would be well spent. It is expected that a number of different suggestions will be received at the meeting of the council on Tuesday night.

SOME MEN MILLINERS.

Miss Avert and her lady friends entertained their gentlemen friends at a hat trimming contest at the home of Mrs. A. J. Piepenbrink, Thursday evening. One of the guests contributes the following jingling story of the pleasant affair:

Six flowers, six hats, six boys on the floor;
Six needles fast-flying through trimmings galore;
Long threads and no thimbles—O, my! how they work.
Till duty's completed not one of them shirk.
Feet crossed and feet tangled, some bent on their knees;
Not one of them copied, each trimmed as he pleased.
Hats truly original you'll find on display
Out at Piepenbrink's, Spy Run, each sunshiny day.

Rev. J. W. Bailey, of Plymouth Congregational church, will attend the state Christian Endeavor convention at Indianapolis June 26 to 29, and will make an address on "Every Endeavorer a Soul Winner."

MARSHALL FIELD AND CO.'S WAREHOUSE MANAGER

Cured of Catarrh of Kidneys by Pe-ru-na.

HON. JOHN T. SHEAHAN, OF CHICAGO.

Hon. John T. Sheahan, who has been for seventeen years manager of Marshall Field & Co.'s wholesale warehouse, and is corporal 3d Regiment Infantry, I. N. G., writes the following letter from 3733 Indiana avenue, Flat Six, Chicago, Ill.:

Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Gentlemen:—Last summer I caught a cold which seemed to settle in my kidneys and affected them badly. I tried a couple of kidney remedies largely advertised, but they did not help me any. One of my foremen told me of the great help he had received in using Peruna in a similar case, and I at once procured some.

"It was indeed a blessing to me, as I am on my feet a large part of the day, and trouble such as I had affected me seriously, but four bottles of Peruna cured me entirely and I would not be without it for three months salary."—JOHN T. SHEAHAN.

Mr. Jacob Fleiz writes from 41 Sumner avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"I am now a new man at the age of seventy-five years, thanks to your wonderful remedy Peruna."—Jacob Fleiz.

Catarrhal inflammation of the mucous lining of the kidneys, also called "Bright's disease," may be either acute or chronic. The acute form produces symptoms of such prominence that the serious nature of the disease is at once suspected, but the chronic variety may come on so gradually and insidiously that its presence is not suspected until after it has fastened itself thoroughly upon its victim.

At the appearance of the first symptom Peruna should be taken. This remedy strikes at once at the very root of the disease.

PIONEER WOMAN IS NO MORE

MRS. LOUIS REICHELDERFER DIES AT MAYSVILLE.

Had Resided in Allen County Since 1863, and Was Widely and Favorably Known.

Mrs. Julia A. Reichelderfer died shortly after midnight at her home in Maysville, at the advanced age of 81 years. Mrs. Reichelderfer's death came at the termination of an extended illness, and was due to dropsy complicated with the infirmities of age.

Mrs. Reichelderfer was the wife of the venerable Louis Reichelderfer, who is now more than 82 years of age, and the family located in Allen county in 1863. She was a most estimable woman, very widely known and held in the highest regard by all who knew her. She was a native of Pennsylvania, and had been for many years a member of the Lutheran church.

Surviving are the husband, six sons and two daughters. The children are Elihu, William, John, Albin, Lafayette and Aaron M. Reichelderfer, the latter a deputy sheriff of Allen county; Mrs. Howard Starr and Mrs. George Charleswood, of Garrett. One daughter died some years ago.

The funeral announcement has not been made.

CAME NEAR DROWNING.

Harry, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fahlsing, of 133 Wallace street, had an extremely narrow escape from death by drowning this morning. The little fellow, while playing about the yard, fell backward into a large tub filled with rain-water, alighting upon his head in such a manner as to be entirely unable to help himself. Fortunately other members of the family were close at hand and quickly dragged the little fellow from the water, which was fast strangling him. He was resuscitated after a few minutes' effort, and is suffering no bad consequences from his experience.

DIED IN CHICAGO.

The remains of Mrs. A. M. Markle, who died at her home in Chicago Thursday, were brought to this city today, and the funeral services were held from the home of Mrs. C. C. Schlatter, 110 East Wayne street, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Mrs. Markle was a daughter of Elias Zimmerman, of Auburn, and a sister of Mrs. Schlatter. Attorneys A. H. and J. R. Bittinger are uncles of the deceased. Rev. J. K. Walts conducted the funeral services.

LIGHTNING HITS BARNS.

Reports of two cases of lightning damage in Allen county were filed with Secretary Kelsey, of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance company this morning. The barn of Fred Bleke, in Washington township, was struck a day or two ago, and later the barn of Matthias Paulen, in Cedar Creek township, was a target for the electric fluid. Both structures were saved and the damage is not extensive.

one another in generosity and States ambassador to France, spoke in part as follows:

"This statue is not simply to commemorate war but to typify peace and good will between the newest republic of the old world and the oldest republic of the new world. Seas made us distant, comradeship has made us near. This inauguration takes place beneath the three resplendent colors which at the present day are those of the respective banners of the sister republics. Their folds have a right to be placed in close touch, for the old flags which they represent were interlaced in battle, waved together in victory, and were entwined in peace. May the ruthless hand of discord never rend them asunder."

LODGE, ORATOR OF THE DAY.

The orator of the day was Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, who began his address as the French band concluded a selection. His oration was in part as follows:

"This statue is the counterfeit presentment of the gallant figure of a gallant gentleman. Born in 1725 of noble family, a native of Vendome, Joan Baptiste Donatien de Vimsur, Comte de Rochambeau had just passed his fifty-fifth birthday when he landed at Newport. His career had been long and distinguished. His honors and his rank in the army had been won in the field, not in the ante-chambers of Versailles.

"He reached the United States at a dark hour for the American cause. The first fervor of resistance had cooled, the active fighting had subsided in the north, congress had grown feeble and inert, government and finance both dragged heavily and it seemed as if the revolution, so successful in the field, would founder upon the rocks of political and executive incapacity. Washington and the army in the midst of almost unparalleled difficulties alone kept the cause alive. The coming of Rochambeau and his army was a great good fortune and yet its first result was to induce further relaxation of effort on the part of congress."

The orator then dwelt on the inactivity during the summer, the reluctance and hesitation of the continental congress to do anything and the final arrival of Count De Grasse with the French fleet, which supplied Washington with his most vital need, a means of opposing himself to British sea power. Senator Lodge touched briefly on the brilliant Yorktown campaign, the surrender of Cornwallis and his great army and the triumph of the revolutionary arms.

"We unveil this statue in honor of a brave soldier who fought by the side of Washington. We place it here to keep his memory fresh in remembrance and as a monument of our gratitude to France. But let us not forget that we also commemorate here the men who first led in arms the democratic movement which during a century of conflict has advanced the cause of freedom and popular government throughout the world of western civilization."

As Mr. Lodge closed the French band played the "Star Spangled Banner." The closing remarks of the day were by General Brugere, of the French army.

Bishop Satterlee brought the ceremonies to a close with benediction and the French and American forces passed in review before the president.

This afternoon the French guests visited the capitol and the congressional library.

pointment to be assistant at the Cathedral will be received with great satisfaction by the Cathedral congregation.

Rev. Thomas Mungovan, who has been appointed to the Indiana Harbor parish, has been assistant at St. Patrick's for a year, being one of the first priests ordained by Bishop Alerding. Father Mungovan has proved himself a most capable priest, and his appointment to a charge is in recognition of his abilities. Rev. Edward Mungovan and Rev. James Connelly, who were ordained this morning, both received their early education in the parochial schools of this city, and are very well known here.

DISPUTES THE MAYOR.

Editor of The Sentinel:—I have just read the proclamation of our worthy mayor concerning the condition of the supply of water. In his proclamation he says the city is furnishing no breweries or railroads with water. The mayor must know he makes a misstatement of the facts. I know whereof I speak, and therefore declare that the city is furnishing the Wabash railroad with every drop of water used by it in this city and has done so since March the 1st. I am ready to substantiate the truth of this before any jury or in any court of the county of Allen or state of Indiana. The facts can be very easily proved by investigation.

WAS A DOCTOR'S SPECIMEN.

The discovery of the remains of a partially developed infant found in the Klett lumber yard on West Superior street Friday evening promised to develop into something of a sensation until Dr. W. W. Barnett, the coroner, made an investigation. The discovery was made by a man named Beatty, residing on West Superior street, and he promptly notified the police. Dr. Barnett's examination disclosed that the foetus had been preserved in alcohol, doubtless the property of some physician or medical student, and had probably been carried to the river to be discarded.

WILL MEET ON MONDAY.

Beginning Monday the Association of Medical Officers of American Institutions for Idiotic and Feeble-minded Persons will hold its twenty-sixth annual session at the state school for feeble-minded. The meeting will continue Monday and Tuesday, and it will bring together some of the most eminent workers in the care of the feeble-minded. Among those who will attend are President F. W. Keating, of Owings Mills, Md., Dr. N. W. Bullard, of Boston, Dr. Walter E. Fernald, of New Waverley, Mass.; Dr. M. W. Barr, of Elwyn, Pa.; Dr. W. G. Spiller and Dr. J. Thorrington, of Philadelphia; Dr. H. Richardson, of Baltimore; J. Moorhead Murdoch, of Polk, Pa.; Miss Alice Morrison, of Vineland, N. J.; Miss Mary Blackwell Sterling, of Orange, N. J.; E. R. Johnstone, of Vineland, N. J.; Dr. George Mogridge and Dr. C. C. Wilhite, Glenwood, Iowa; Miss Margaret Bancroft, Haddonfield, N. J., and A. R. T. Wylie, Ph. D., of Boston. The children of the state school will give an entertainment Monday evening in honor of the visitors.

ABOUT THE CITY HALL.

Frederick Breimeyer has been granted a permit to build a brick house on Lewis street at a cost of $800; John Lang, a frame shop in Bowserville at a cost of $550; William Wolke, house on Swinney avenue, $1,150.

Another case of smallpox was reported to the health office this morning by Dr. M. Harrod. The patient is Mrs. Lillie, living at 1844 Force street, who has been sick for about a week. She will not be removed to the hospital, but will be treated at her home. The other cases now under treatment are improving as favorably as can be expected and none of the cases are very severe ones.

A new case of diphtheria has been reported from No. 1217 Thayer street and a new case of scarlet fever from No. 262 East Williams street.

A driver for the Foster furniture company delivered a bicycle at the city hall yesterday. He saw a boy riding the wheel and asked where he got it, whereupon the lad dismounted and ran away, leaving the wheel behind. It was probably stolen some place by the boy.

BOTH WELLS ARE GOOD.

The Fort Wayne Gas company yesterday completed two new gas wells in the Grant county field, and both developed a rock pressure of about ninety pounds to the square inch. Superintendent Hoffman regards this as a good showing in view of the experience of the past few years. The two finished yesterday make a total of seventeen new wells drilled this year by the Fort Wayne company.

A FORT WAYNE INDUSTRY

THAT MERITS ATTENTION OF CAPITAL.

That conditions have changed in every line of business no man dare deny. That the "Hicks Process" has made it possible to treat gold ore at less cost and with greater saving of values than any other known process, no well informed person dare deny. That the New Mexico Gold Ore Treating Company has formed its plans on a business basis that removes all possibility of failure, there is no doubt. Why?

1st. Because the company will operate a treating works, buying and treating gold ore, making a sure profit upon every pound of ore treated.

2nd. Because no ore is refractory to the "Hicks Process," and it can be treated at less cost per ton of ore than by any other process.

3rd. Because there is no competition and no agents are required to sell its products.

This company has purchased of Dr. Hicks the exclusive right of what was known as a "Reserved Mill," that is, we have the right to use every invention in the "Hicks Process" without royalty and can enlarge our mill to any capacity.

The Bass Foundry and Machine Works are now building a complete milling outfit, engine, boiler and "Hicks Process" Machine for this company, and it is the intention of this company to add more machinery from time to time until its mill will treat more than 1,000 tons of gold ore each day.

To sum up the proposition, then, it must depend upon two points for its success.

1st. Is there sufficient quantity of gold ore in the mountains of New Mexico to employ the mill? And,

2nd. Will the "Hicks Process" recover the gold?

That there is sufficient gold ore none dare deny. That the "Hicks Process" recovers values equal to the fire assay on the average, no man well posted upon the merits of the process will dispute. This being an established fact, then what advantage has this company over the common, every-day kind of a mining company? Simply as stated above. If this company never mines a ton of its ore (which has been tested and shows an average of $30 per ton), but depends entirely upon other mines for its supply (same as the smelters do), it can buy ore on which it will make an average of $10 to $20 per ton, hence all doubt and possibility of failure is removed, because the per cent. of dividends would depend entirely upon the number of tons treated daily.

Now, to treat 100 tons daily at a profit of $10 per ton will pay 10 per cent. annual dividends; 200 tons daily will yield 20 per cent., while 500 tons daily would yield 50 per cent., and 1,000 tons daily will yield the par value of the stock annually in dividends. You say this is not possible. Well, we can name mills in America that treat as high as 5,000, 6,000 and even 8,000 tons daily, and where stock is worth as high as 25 for 1.

This company will enlarge its mill constantly until stock that can be had at 25 cents now will be worth $10. The Standard Oil Co. buy and treat crude oil. The Minneapolis grist mills buy and treat the Dakota wheat; that is business, and it pays. So with this company, it will buy and treat ore. No loss; no chance; no guess work; no failure.

A limited number of shares of stock are now offered at 25 cents per share, par value $1.00 each. Lay away $100, $1,000 or more, and you will have a sure income when every other investment you now have may fail to produce results. We invite your inquiry. We court investigation.

Call at office or send for leaflet. The New Mexico Gold Ore Treating Company, Room 5 Arcade, Ground Floor, Fort Wayne, Ind.

NEWS OF THE POLICE.

Samuel Snodgrass was not quite so dilapidated in appearance this morning as he has been on previous occasions, but he had had a jag that beat anything that had ever before been placed to his account. He very frankly admitted that he had been tampering with the jug, but wanted an opportunity to explain the matter. The judge said he might perhaps get the sheriff to listen to his tale, and at any rate he would give him an eleven-day trial at it. Later his employer appeared and stayed the docket.

Henry Hoffman had one of the plain, untrimmed kind and was very penitent this morning. He was also suffering from an overdose of katzenjammer. The judge made it $1 and costs and Mr. Hoffman, too, went over.

After police court had adjourned William Bowman was brought in on a charge of wife desertion, preferred by Humane Officer Schlandroff. His case will be tried on Monday, and meanwhile, in default of bail, the man will remain in the city jail. Bowman is a painter by trade and formerly kept house here. Some time ago he took his household effects and stored or sold them, and told his wife that she should go back to her parents; that he was through with her. She and her two children, aged ten months and four years, were left without means and are now with her parents, who reside near Columbia City. Bowman has had steady work at his trade and is financially able to provide for his family.

Last night Officer Thomma was sent for about 11:30, the messenger saying that there was a man prowling around residences on West Superior street. He found an old man, completely blind, wandering around a yard and took him to the New York house, where he housed him for the night. The man had some money and said that he had got lost. His name was not learned by the officer.

Sam Wing, a laundryman at 1904 Calhoun street, had his troubles last night. About 1:30 this morning a couple of young fellows called and wanted to get a drink of water. Wing refused them, whereupon they accommodatingly threw a club through his front window. Wing does not know the men, but says he would recognize them if he should ever see them again.

THE MARKETS.

Chicago, May 24.—A strongly bearish sentiment engendered by the government report on last night's curb was present at the opening of the grain pits today. For the first few moments business was large at reduced prices, but as soon as the bearish news had been digested the crowd once more turned listless and following the course of the week past, refused to do active business even at the decline. July wheat opened ¼@⅝c to ⅝@¾c lower at 72¾c to 73½c and did not get outside of these figures. Cables were weak, experts gave strongly bearish forecasts of the harvest and suggested winter crops would exceed 400,000,000 bushels. The weather almost everywhere was all that was to be desired. The government bureau's revision of the crop report of last year to accord with the census figures indicated an increase of 4,000,000 acres and a harvest of 700,000,000 bushels—an increase of 70,000,000 over earlier reports. Local receipts were 7 cars, none of contract grade. Minneapolis and Duluth reported 139 cars, making a total for the three points of 132 cars, against 113 last week and 300 a year ago.

On the lower prices for wheat there arose a good cash demand. The seaboard reported 50 loads taken for export. 2 loads were sold here and then came the report of 310,000 bushels seaboard clearances in wheat and flour. May prices worked up ⅝c over the July delivery and July rallied sharply and closed firm, a shade up, at 73¾c.

July corn opened weak, ⅝c to ¾@⅞c lower at 61¼c to 61⅝@61⅜c in sympathy with the wheat break and on increased receipts here. Country offerings were better, although the weather has made the ground so wet that bears say the full extent of the rains is not indicated by receipts. The government figures on last year's crop were about equal to the commercial estimates—1,582,000,000 bushels. There was a report on the board that the recent subsoils in much of the corn belt were dry and that the recent rains, while helping the plant materially, had not gone far enough. This same report, however, said that conditions were very favorable and that continued moderate moisture would bring a big harvest. July was bought sparingly and advanced to 1¼c. Receipts were 94 cars.

There was some fair support in corn after the first hour, stuff was held light and July rallied to a strong close, ⅝c higher, at 62¼c.

Trade in oats was dull and featureless. Lower prices prevailed early on the weakness in the other grains, but some support came in and stuff was not freely offered. July opened ¼@⅜c to ⅝@½c lower at 37½c to 36⅝c and sold up to 37¼c. Receipts were 182 cars.

Provisions opened weaker on local selling induced by a weak hog market and the break in grains. Some support from packers was evident and good advances over yesterday were made. July pork opened a shade lower at $17.60 and advanced to $17.95; July lard unchanged at $10.12½, and sold to $10.15, and July ribs 2½c lower to unchanged at $9.35 to $9.37½ and topped $9.40.

THE DAY ON WALL STREET.

New York, May 24.—The market started with narrow and irregular changes, which were quite without significance. The tendency on secondary quotations was to lose the slight gains and regain the small losses. Almost immediately the market fell into a state bordering on stagnation. George A. Fuller Construction stock rose a point.

The drift of prices was scarcely perceptible except in special cases. Anaconda reacted a point, Fuller Construction 1½, with a rally of 2 and North American lost 2. Canadian Pacific moved up 2 points on light dealings. Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, Malting and American Linseed rose a point or more. The general market hardened very slightly.

There were advances of 1 to 2 in Pittsburg, C. C. & St. Louis, Illinois Central, Ann Arbor preferred, Smelting, Detroit, Metropolitan Transit, Tennessee Coal, Colorado Fuel, Locomotive preferred and American Car preferred. Canadian Pacific was the feature of the market, advancing 3, and Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste Marie and Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic preferred rose a point. Fuller Construction gained 2½ in all. The general market was quiet and was little affected by these movements or by the bank statement. The closing was moderately active and steady.

DAMAGE BY STORM

PUMPING STATION STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

SMOKESTACK PROSTRATED

BOILERS STRIPPED OF THEIR PIPE ATTACHMENTS.

FURNITURE WORKS EXPAND

MANUFACTURERS MAKE ADDITIONS TO SHOPS.

The storm which visited this vicinity last night did considerable damage to railroad property. Lightning struck the smoke stack at the Pennsylvania pumping station, at the St. Mary's river, and put the plant out of business. The tall steel stack was prostrated by the blow, the boiler shed roof was stripped of shingles and the boilers beneath were partially stripped of pipes and other attachments, rendering them useless for steam purposes until repairs can be made. Mr. Foster, the night fireman at the station, stepped into the pumping department just a moment before the lightning struck the stack and by so doing no doubt saved his life. He was only slightly shocked by the lightning. A gang of workmen immediately began repairs and in the meantime the company will draw its water supply from another source.

The Pennsylvania telegraph service was also slightly damaged by the storm. Between Warsaw and Plymouth many poles on one side of the tracks went down, but luckily communication was not completely cut off and the company was able to conduct business with but little delay.

On the Nickel Plate, the telegraph service was more seriously interrupted. A short distance east of Mortimer a large tree fell across the wires and as they went to the ground they pulled down seven poles before they broke. This accident occurred at 2:15 o'clock this morning and communication with points east of Mortimer was completely cut off from that hour until 9:30 this morning. Repairs have been made and the service is again first-class.

All of the other railway telegraph offices report their lines intact and the interruption to business only momentary during the worst part of the storm season.

SOME DEALS OF WABASH.

So rapid have been the acquisitions to the Wabash system lately that the general public has not been able to keep itself informed on that score. The Sentinel published last Wednesday an account of the absorption by the Wabash of the Ann Arbor road and following close upon the announcement of that deal comes the news of another important deal in the interest of the Wabash. Concerning this transaction the Detroit Journal says: "The Detroit and Mackinac railway, which operates a line from Bay City, Mich., to Tower, Mich., a distance of 178 miles, and has various branches with a total mileage of 138 miles, has passed from the control of the Morgan interest into the hands of persons friendly to the Wabash. Charles Steel, H. B. Hollins, E. B. Randolph and Anthony J. Thomas have resigned as directors and have been succeeded by Henry K. McHarg, Walter Ferguson, A. D. Morgan and Edward H. Bonner. Mr. McHarg is a director of the Wabash and it is presumed that the Detroit and Mackinac purchase, like that of the Ann Arbor, is in the interest of the Gould system. The Detroit and Mackinac road was reorganized in 1895 and has $2,195,000 capital stock and $3,000,000 of bonds outstanding."

An Associated Press dispatch to The Sentinel, bearing New York date, quotes President Joseph Ramsey as follows: "The Ann Arbor road is now held in the same way as the Western Maryland and the West Virginia Central are held, by a syndicate, some of whose members are interested in Gould properties, but there is no official connection between Ann Arbor and the Wabash, or any of the Gould roads."

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says: "Chief Engineer Patterson, of the Pittsburg, Carnegie and Western railroad, which is building an extension of the Wheeling and Lake Erie road into Pittsburg, has completed construction contracts aggregating $2,200,000. All arrangements have been made to complete a new line from Pittsburg to Jewett, O., before snow falls this year. This line will enable Wabash trains to run directly into Pittsburg. Nearly all of the stock of the Pittsburg, Carnegie and Western is owned by Gould interests."

PENNSYLVANIA RELIEF.

In April the Pennsylvania Voluntary Relief Department paid in death benefits from accident $6,500, there being ten deaths; benefits on account of death from natural causes, $11,031.25, there being fifteen deaths; disablement benefits from accident, $10,439.30; on account of sickness, $10,001.40, making total disbursements of the month, $37,971.95, paid to 1,538 members or in case of death to their legal heirs. Since established, July, 1889 the relief department has paid $3,466,113.27 to 157,307 members.

BOSTON EXCURSION.

Col. R. G. Thompson, of the Wabash, was notified this morning that the request of interested parties for excursion rates to Boston June 12, 13 and 14 had been granted and that tickets would go on sale at the date mentioned. The rate decided upon will be one fare plus $1 for the round trip, which makes the round fare $19.75. Excursion rates to Boston are not frequent and on this account it is expected there will be a good crowd out of this district.

FOUND THE POCKETBOOK.

Two hours after the arrival of Pennsylvania train No. 35 last evening, Miss Bertie Woulfe sent a man to the Pennsylvania depot to notify Captain Stoll that she had lost her pocketbook, containing $32.50 and she believed she dropped it in the car. A search was made and the purse was found beneath the foot rest of a seat, where it had fallen from the lady's hands. Captain Stoll returned the purse and money to the owner this morning. Miss Woulfe resides in Glendale, Ohio, and she came here with her mother to attend the ordination exercises.

ELECT NEW OFFICERS.

The White Carnation club, which is composed exclusively of Wabash machinists, held its annual election last night and elected the following officers: James Olive, president; Fred Stahl, secretary; Ed Tibbles, treasurer. After the business meeting, the club had a banquet.

CLERKS PLAYING BALL.

A game of ball between the motive power and the shop clerks of the Pennsylvania is on at Centlivre park this afternoon. It was called at 2:30 and had not advanced at the point where a guess could be made as to the result when the Sentinel went to press. The game is to be to a "finish" and it will probably be completed Monday in time for the Sentinel to make the announcement. Motive power line up—Spamley, c; Potthoff and Tucker, p; Tracey, 1b; Foster, 2b; Disser, 3b; Ball, rf; Otten, lf; Casterline, cf; LaMar, ss. Shop Clerk line up—Longfield, c; Steger and Rogers, p; Harrod, 3b; Gage, ss; Dartnall, 2b; Raegers, 1b; Piepenbrink, lf; Heisler, cf; Meyers, rf. Last year the score stood 135 to 35, but the records fail to name the winning party.

FURNITURE WORKS ADDITION.

The addition to the plant of the Fort Wayne Special Furniture works is now complete and the company will increase its working force as soon as the new machinery, some of which is already on the ground, can be set up. This work will be taken up Monday and pushed rapidly forward to the end. The new shop was constructed upon plans aiming at good ventilation and light, as well as convenience in other ways, and in this it is a model, being "as light as day" at all times. The company seems to be prosperous. Its business is increasing to the satisfaction of the proprietors and to the full capacity of the shop to handle it. An order from Philadelphia, received yesterday, calls for thirty of the company's dental cabinets, which seem to meet with favor wherever they are introduced. There are now several orders from out of town dealers for this cabinet.

INDUSTRIAL NOTES.

The Nickel Plate pay car was in the city yesterday.

Alfred Forester has taken a position in the Wabash boiler shops.

H. K. Malich has taken a clerical position in the store room of the electric works.

William McBride and George Keenan, machinists, took positions at the Electric works this morning.

A. A. Serva went to St. Louis last night on business for the Fort Wayne Electric company, of which he is the chief clerk.

Tonight Passenger Conductor M. O. Ginty will take his run out on the Pittsburg, after a week's absence on account of relief business.

The Boston and Albany has created the position of superintendent of time service and has appointed F. Hammond, of Buffalo, to the place.

Pittsburg Fireman C. J. Lapp went to Toledo last night to join his wife and accompany her home. The lady has been visiting her folks in that city.

The Pressed Steel Car company this week delivered to the Panhandle 300 steel hopper cars of 100,000 pounds capacity.

Alonzo Swank went to South Haven, Mich., and R. Pettit to Canton, Ohio, to day to do repair work on electric light plants.

The car works at Dayton, O., has commenced the building of eleven coaches for the Big Four, to be full vestibuled, and seventy-two feet long.

The Chesapeake and Ohio has placed an order with the Pressed Steel Car company at McKee's Rocks for 1,000 steel cars, 100,000 pounds capacity.

The Wabash had a special through this city yesterday, carrying the Dunkards who had been in attendance at the meetings in Harrisburg to their homes.

The Cincinnati, Richmond and Muncie road, now only partly completed, has made application to become a member of the Indiana Car Service association.

George L. Bradbury, once general manager of the Lake Erie and Western road, has returned from Europe. The trip abroad was made in the interest of his wife's health.

Conductor Frank Granger, is off duty on account of sickness in his family, and Conductor L. Savio is laying off to attend to some business. Both are Pennsylvania employes.

E. T. Davis, foreman of the Pennsylvania freight house at Indianapolis, is in the city visiting his son, Gregg Davis. Mr. Davis formerly had a similar position in this city.

An error crept into the Grand Rapids time card published in these columns yesterday. Northbound train No. 5 leaves the city at 2:20 a. m. instead of 8:20, as erroneously stated.

Engineers H. W. Frase and Bert Crosby and Conductor Elmer Harper, of the Nickel Plate, have returned from Bass lake, where they spent a week fishing, with rather indifferent success.

Louis H. Hines quit his position at the Wabash freight house and has been succeeded by C. T. Mandorfer. Mr. Hines will go to Columbia City to work. Edward Scott, of the same warehouse, is sick.

The Pennsylvania Employes Veteran association, which will hold its eleventh annual meeting next Wednesday, has 600 members. During the past year there were twenty-three deaths in the ranks.

The Grand Rapids and Indiana chief clerks, mentioned by The Sentinel yesterday, arrived here from Richmond last evening and this morning they left for Kalamazoo, where they will spend the night.

After a two weeks' trial, F. E. Palmer has retired from a position in the flue department of the Pittsburg shops and returned to his old place at the Packard Organ factory. The work in the flue shop was too heavy for him.

Ed Virts, night watchman at the Calhoun street crossing of the Pittsburg, went to Montpelier this morning for a visit with his parents and during his absence Fred Strebig, an extra watchman, has charge of the crossing.

Nearly all of the big shops will adopt a Saturday half-holiday for the summer months. Notice to shut down the mechanical departments of the Pittsburg shops at noon on Saturday was served on the department foremen yesterday.

The Pennsylvania has been compelled to go to Chicago for laborers to work on the excavation for the new round house, not being able to get sufficient force here. Twenty-five Italians were brought here for that purpose yesterday.

The Fort Wayne Electric company today sent a car load of the Wood lamps to Chicago, where the company has a big contract for lamps. A 30-horse power motor also left the works today, being consigned to the Green, Green & Company, Dayton, Ohio.

The Wabash will transform its old Mogul engines into switch engines as rapidly as needed. This transformation will include the cutting down of the high tank to the regulation sloping affair, which gives to the men in the cab a good rear view.

William Seybold, who was employed as an organ tuner at the Packard works for several years, has arranged to engage in the manufacture of organs in Chicago with a man named Reiter. Their factory will be at 44 and 46 Townsend street.

Bert Lewis resigned and John Lefors was hired at the Pittsburg round house this morning.

Pittsburg Engineer James Burns has taken a lay off for the purpose of attending the ordination exercises tomorrow.

Frank A. Jacobs, foreman of the Moberly blacksmith shops of the Wabash, was in the city yesterday, combining business with a visit with old friends and acquaintances.

W. W. Atterbury, motive power superintendent of the Pennsylvania railroad, who had been at Detroit to attend the funeral of his brother, has returned to his home in Altoona.

Contractor William Wolfe commenced work this morning upon a house at the corner of Nelson and Swinney streets for Henry Peek, the foreman of the flask room at the Bass foundry.

The Lackawanna has purchased a large tract of land at Scranton and will erect thereon a mammoth locomotive plant. The company will also erect new car shops of large proportions.

J. Richards of the Pittsburg shops, is off duty on account of sickness. R. A. Lamar, J. Waldschmidt, A. F. H. Dornte and Charles Kronemiller, of the same shops, are off duty for various reasons.

It has been found advisable to change the hour of departure of the Wabash shopmen's excursion to Detroit. The train will leave at 6 o'clock in the morning, instead of at 6:30 as previously announced.

J. Haslop, of the Pittsburg planing mills, took his son to Chicago this morning to receive another treatment for a deformed ankle. The young fellow is getting along nicely and will soon be cured of the deformity.

Harry C. Henderson has returned to the city and this morning he took a position at the Pittsburg blacksmith shop. Two years ago he went to Louisville, where he was employed in shops up to the time of leaving that city for Fort Wayne.

The Boston and Albany company is considering a proposition to set out 10,000 catalpa trees on a tract of land near Westfield. The trees will be made into ties when they reach proper size. The Illinois Central has already engaged in growing timber for tie purposes.

To prevent opposition from building an electric line between Kokomo and Marion, the Clover Leaf has arranged to equip that portion of the line for electric cars and to put a number of them in service, making hourly runs out of each city. Marion and Kokomo are twenty miles apart.

The Nickel Plate will have an excursion from Knox to this city tomorrow. The Lake Erie and Western local officials have received notice that a big crowd is coming in over that line from the south and the Findlay inaugurates its Sunday excursion tomorrow. There will probably be several hundred strangers in the city.

C. S. Todd, who was the night operator at the Wabash telegraph office, has been transferred to the Andrews yards to work days and the place vacated at the Fort Wayne office has been filled by C. E. Conners, who was operator and agent at Spencerville, on the new line.

Robert Hank, of Berlin, Germany, arrived in the city today and is stopping at the home of G. J. Reiber, of the Pittsburg car machine shop. The visitor is here to stay if he finds matters as he expects to and is now looking around with that end in view. He is a brother to Edward Hank, of the City Mills.

The fact that T. J. Rodabaugh and Charles P. Cherry brought from Rome City yesterday a respectable string of fish each, is not conclusive evidence that they were the only ones in the party of Pennsylvania men who caught fish. W. E. Davis and R. J. Lyons did a little in that way, but modestly forbade a display of the catches.

The Grand Rapids and Indiana company has arranged to run a special train to Rome City on the evening of Tuesday, June 3, when Miss Hanker's dancing class will give a ball at the resort. The train will leave the city at 7:30 and returning leave Rome City at 12 o'clock and the popular price of 50 cents has been decided upon. The excursion is open to all.

Another speed war is probable between the northwestern lines. The Chicago and Northwestern, with the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, has broken the time agreement. This has stirred up competing lines, and some fast runs may be looked for. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy will undoubtedly meet the time made by the Chicago and Rock Island and the Chicago and Northwestern, which is eleven hours from Chicago to Omaha.

Passenger Firemen F. Maloney and D. B. Vreeland, of the Nickel Plate, have secured an indefinite leave of absence and will take a pleasure trip. During their absence Fireman V. P. Kohlman will fire for Engineer George Cooper on engine 2 and Fireman H. F. Mansfield will be with Engineer James Hardigan on engine 134. Fireman A. W. Crapson will take the place of Kohlman in the cab of engine 119.

MAKING PEOPLE OVER AGAIN

THAT IS PRACTICALLY WHAT SMITH'S GREEN MOUNTAIN RENOVATOR, THE GREAT BODY BUILDER, DOES FOR PEOPLE.

You very often hear people say they wish they could get away from themselves and wish they had new arms, new legs or something of that sort. This sounds like an unreasonable idea, but as a matter of fact it isn't.

If you give Nature a chance, she will make you all over again and make you right. All that is needed is the assistance rendered by Nature's own products, wisely intended and prepared for these very purposes.

In Smith's Green Mountain Renovator we have a combination of herbs and roots which have been shown to provide just the assistance that Nature needs in rebuilding the body. This isn't a theory, but a fact which has been fully proved by experience.

We urge you to try this medicine.

Vermont is the home of this medicine, and it was discovered many years ago by a celebrated Scotch physician visiting that State for his health. He found among the roots and herbs of Northern Vermont the ingredients of a medicine which he believed to be the ideal blood medicine. He was right, as thousands will testify.

"I have been troubled for 25 or 30 years with what some physicians pronounce Eczema and others Salt Rheum. It is at any rate a case of bad blood disorder and anything but pleasant—constantly itching. I have been treated in many different ways and tried almost everything that made any pretentions to cure blood diseases, and to no purpose, until through the advice of a friend I was prevailed upon to try SMITH'S GREEN MOUNTAIN RENOVATOR.

"I have used three bottles faithfully, according to directions, with wonderful effect—allaying the itching—though not yet entirely cured, am a long ways towards it, and have every reason to believe that I soon will be. In fact I am so much impressed with the curative powers of the medicine that I am ever ready to extol its merits."

(Signed) CHAS. E. MILLARD,
KELLER'S HOTEL, Albany, N. Y.

If you have any blood troubles or diseases or disturbances of the liver, stomach or kidneys; if you are in an enfeebled, broken down condition of continual lassitude; if you feel that life is no longer worth living, get yourself built over again by the use of Smith's Green Mountain Renovator.

Sick men ought to use it.

Weak women ought to use it.

Ailing children ought to use it.

It is the one great family medicine that can be absolutely relied upon.

If you have ever used it, you know how good it is.

If you haven't, try it and if it doesn't prove to be just what we claim it to be, we will refund your money.

He was arraigned in Justice Bullerman's court at 4 o'clock and a few minutes later was taken to the circuit court, to which the justice bound him for appearance, and at 4:20 he received a sentence of one to fourteen years in Michigan City on his plea of guilty. ### TWO HURT IN A RUNAWAY.

Two men were painfully, though not dangerously injured in a runaway on West Main street this forenoon. Otto Bowman and John Kidd, driving a team owned by William Geake, were coming from the residence of J. H. Bass, and as they passed beneath the tracks of the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad a switch engine passing over the trestle above them scared the horses. Dashing ahead suddenly, both men were thrown from the wagon and struck the block pavement, lacerating and bruising their faces painfully. It is feared, also, that Bowman's nose is broken. One of the horses was badly hurt.

HOW COUNT DE ROCHAMBEAU WAS ENTERTAINED AND THEN "TOUCHED" BY ROBERT MORRIS.

The dedication in Washington today of the Rochambeau monument in the presence of the nation's official French guests, recalls a piquant story not recorded in the popular histories. It illustrates the truly lovable character of Rochambeau apart from his military virtues displayed in our revolution and demonstrating the unfailing sincerity of his devotion to the American cause. Robert Morris, of Philadelphia, merchant prince and financier of the revolution, whose heroic sacrifices in that capacity were cheerfully made and uncomplainingly borne even to the extent of pecuniary ruin and personal abasement, shares with Rochambeau the honors of the story.

As soon as General Rochambeau had received word from Admiral de Grasse, then in the West Indies, that the latter would shortly sail with his fleet for the Chesapeake to cooperate with the allied armies against the British, Washington made haste to concert with Rochambeau that fortunate campaign against Cornwallis in Virginia which was fated to decide the destinies of the new world. Rochambeau made a junction with Washington, then encamped at Dobbs Ferry, on the Hudson, in Westchester county, N. Y., and the two kept up the appearance of a design to attack the enemy's stronghold at New York. Two days before breaking up camp on the Hudson, Washington, April 17, 1781, wrote a dispatch to Robert Morris in Philadelphia, informing him confidentially of the new plan and urging him to look out for provisions and for boats to transport the troops south from the Head of the Elk, the northernmost arm of the Chesapeake, adding, above all, that it would be necessary for the success of the expedition to give a month's pay in specie to the American troops under General Lincoln, in order to reconcile them to the southern service and put them in fighting humor.

A NIGHT OF TOASTING.

It was on August 19 that the allied troops left the Hudson, and falling off through Hackensack and Newark to keep up the idea of a meditated attack upon Staten Island, N. Y., made their way rapidly across New Jersey. At Chatham, in Morris county, N. J., the allies passed quickly to Trenton, and then to Philadelphia August 30, where the citizens turned out to welcome them. A review was held and the troops were inspected in detail by the continental congress. That evening Morris, as the most opulent citizen and head of the so-called "treasury," entertained Rochambeau and Washington, with their principal officers, at an elaborate dinner at his house, Rochambeau, of course, receiving most particular honor and attention. The ships in the harbor put out into the Delaware, mid-stream, and fired repeated salutes, while toast after toast was drunk by the military guests at Morris' board. The first toast was "The United States," the second "His Most Christian Majesty" (King Louis XVI.), the next "His Catholic Majesty" (the Spanish king allied with Louis XVI. against Great Britain), "The Allied Armies," "Count de Grasse's Speedy Arrival," and so on to the end. Rochambeau was delighted with Morris' hospitality.

Washington remained in Philadelphia until the morning of September 5, repeatedly urging Morris verbally to procure the money, and Rochambeau remained until noon that day, their troops having gone ahead. Both before the arrival of those officers and during their stay Morris, deeply impressed with the urgent necessity of furnishing the "douceur," had literally moved heaven and earth to produce it, but in vain. He would gladly have advanced it out of his own strong box, but alas, that was empty and he had already exhausted all his visible resources in equipping this expedition, having paid out $12,000 cash of his own funds and issued notes against his private fortune to the amount of $1,400,000, and besides, it was hard money, not paper, that was now needed. He knew not where to turn to get it. However, two days after the dinner at his house he bethought him in his extremity of Rochambeau, his recent guest.

To him he went, and constrained thereto by the sheer urgency of the case, and repressing his own sense of humiliation at his errand by invoking his patriotism, he fairly "touched" the general, his late guest, for a loan of the needed sum. He explained that Washington absolutely required 20,000 hard dollars to pacify his troops, and pledged himself, in the event the French war chest could spare it, to restore it at any date named. Rochambeau listened with the utmost kindness, and begged Morris to meet him when convenient at the home of the French minister, the Chevalier Cresar Anne de la Luzerne, then resident in Philadelphia.

MONEY FROM FRANCE.

Morris accordingly called on him there on the morning of September 5. Luzerne and General Chastellux, Rochambeau's chief of staff, were present at the interview. After canvassing the subject, they all assured him of their strong desire to oblige, but explained that, to their great regret, their treasure chest was not well filled just then, on account of the drains upon it. They had money on the way from France, lately landed at Boston, but it would take several weeks to get it; and although they confidently expected money also from the fleet of de Grasse, that would not be available until it arrived. Fully comprehending and sympathizing in Morris' predicament, however, and manifesting the sincerest inclination to be gracious, they finally suggested that he go down to Chester and overtake the intendent and treasurer of the French army, who that morning had gone on before, and promised if practicable they would see to it that those officers should furnish the money he required.

Taking with him, therefore, Governor Morris, his assistant in the office of finance on account of his fluency in the French tongue, Morris had a pair of riding horses saddled and the two set out on horseback at 3 o'clock in the afternoon for Chester, down the Delaware. On the way he received a message from Washington announcing the joyful news of de Grasse's safe arrival in the Chesapeake on August 30, six days before. This gave him infinite satisfaction on general principles, but particularly because he foresaw it would enable the French treasurer to make the loan desired. That evening at Chester Rochambeau, who had just arrived, readily, even gladly, agreed to have his treasurer furnish the money at the Head of the Elk. Morris engaged to replace the sum on October 1 next following.

Early on the morning of September 6, Morris set out from Chester to return to Philadelphia, but did not reach the city until noon, having encountered on the road the rear guard of the French army, with their artillery and baggage. On his arrival he at once dispatched Philip Audibert, deputy paymaster general, to the head of the Elk with a note to Rochambeau, and with orders to receive the money promised from the French treasurer and to pay it to the American troops, agreeably to instructions given him in writing. In his note to Rochambeau Morris repeated: "I will take care that the money be replaced at the time agreed upon."

COULDN'T PAY ON TIME.

It was paid over to Audibert by the French treasurer, and by Audibert disbursed among the soldiers, to their unspeakable gratification. But unfortunately there was not enough of it to go around, and Morris was compelled a few days later to supply the deficiency from funds intended for other pressing objects. And when the first of October approached, the date set for the return of the money borrowed, he found himself unable without great inconvenience to keep his promise of repayment. But in his own characteristic way he bravely looked the situation in the face, and consulted the French minister, the Chevalier Luzerne, about it. That nobleman, perceiving the condition and being convinced that the French military chest was not in immediate need of cash, gallantly undertook to assure Rochambeau officially that the transaction would be made good beyond peradventure, and considerately suggested to Morris that in the meantime he might delay payment until the arrival of American funds from France, when he would be "flush." This lifted a load from Morris' mind; yet as a conscientious stickler for forms he failed not to write Rochambeau a full explanation, renewing his pledge to replace the loan. It is gratifying to know that he was able on November 15 following to repay more than one-half the amount, and the remainder subsequently to Rochambeau's order.

This $20,000 was perhaps the most hardly-raised, the most troublesome and withal the most notable sum of all the millions that passed through Morris' hands for the prosecution of the American revolution, and historically it was probably the most important sum of it is size ever raised in that struggle, considering what it helped to accomplish. In that very year, 1781, France had agreed to supply, and was supplying us with four million dollars to continue the war, and from the year 1776 until 1782 she expended in our behalf, all told, the stupendous sum for that day of two hundred and eighty million dollars in clothing, arming, equipping and paying our armies as well as her own forces in America, and in maintaining her fleets incidental to the American service. De Grasse, with his twenty-eight ships of the line, defeated and drove off the British fleet of twenty-four sail under Admiral Graves; de Barras with his fourteen ships arrived safe from Newport to increase the strength of the French sea power and ward off any attempted interference; Cornwallis with his 7,000 troops and 1,000 sailors, completely encompassed by the French army under Rochambeau and the American army under Washington, found that the position he had chosen, while excellent for an army with a superior sea power to protect it, was a veritable snare when deprived of that advantage. The whole force of the besieged, numbering 8,000 men, with 2,000 negro slaves, 100 vessels great and small, 214 guns and twenty-four colors, was surrendered to the allied victors of France and America, and the independence of the United States was achieved.

ORIGIN OF CALENDAR.

Our system of dividing time is 3,800 years old. Seconds and minutes and hours and days and months are a heritage from ancient Babylonia.

This origin of the calendar is proved absolutely through the evidence of some newly discovered Assyrian tablets. One of the inscriptions recently published by Sir Henry Rawlinson reads: "Twelve months, or six times sixty days, constituted one year."

They had a sexagesimal system. The number 60 was to them the figure of mystery which they loved to repeat. It was known as ku, "the prince of figures." That was why they made their hours sixty minutes and their minutes sixty seconds. Likewise they had a talen that was sixty minos, a mino that was sixty shekels and a shekel that was sixty pennies.

The days of the week in their names as well as in the division of time still betray this Babylonish origin. These ancients made seven days in the week from a religious motive. Theirs was an astral religion. Each day of the week they dedicated to a god, and each god was identified with one of the planets, as Saturday (Saturn), etc. Now, they had just five planets, which, with the sun (Sunday) and the moon (Monday) counted in, gave them a group of seven days, which they decided on as the week. From the Babylonians this week of seven days went to the Greeks and to the Latins, and was later taken by the French, the Germans and the Britons.

In its travels the calendar of the week had the sequence of the planetary divinities somewhat changed, but always the original idea has prevailed of naming the days for the gods whom the people worshiped. Thus Wednesday is derived from the German god Woden, and Friday is the day of the German goddess Fria.

At the time of the Assyrian kings, as the tablets show, all of the months had thirty days each, and they went by what is known as the sun year, the year which had 360 days. But at 2700 B. C., and, it is supposed, earlier, they had a sun year of 365 days.

These latest Babylonian finds, besides proving the origin of our division of time, are valuable in their relation to a much-disputed Biblical problem, namely, the famous sum of years which the patriarchs of old are credited with having lived. Defenders of the orthodox interpretation of the Bible have attempted to explain these statements so widely at variance with the probable by saying that in the early Hebrew times there must have been a different division of time from the one now in use, and a year must have been a shorter period.

And by the Babylonian tablets it is proved that people in those days lived lives of ordinary length. For instance, the tablets relate that Hammurabi belonged to the first dynasty of Babylon, which had eleven members. All told, their combined reigns amounted to 303 years, from 2400 to 2095 B. C. That is an average for each of about twenty-eight years, just as it would be in our modern times.

So the ages of Methusaleh and the rest can no longer be explained on the theory that their hundreds of years were short years.

SOME SWIFT FISH.

Recent experiments show that the dolphin, when pursued, can go through the water at the rate of about 32 miles an hour. This is great speed, but for a short distance the salmon can do better, since it has frequently been known to swim at the rate of 40 miles an hour.

Among the smaller fish it is doubtful if there is one which is more swift than the Spanish mackerel. As a rule, however, all those fish which prey on others are remarkably swift, which is only natural, as, if they lacked speed, they would be unable to hunt successfully for prey and would often be obliged to go hungry.

A person in Paris can now speak to Cologne, but only by way of Berlin, which makes the distance about 1,000 miles.

Electric railways are rapidly displacing the old-fashioned diligences in Switzerland.

NEVER FORGET INJURY

Animals That Plot Revenge for Indignities They Have Suffered.

Animals, particularly those of a higher degree of intelligence, seem to have a certain sense of justice which prompts them in some instances to constitute themselves judge and jury and to execute the sentence against the malfeasant in a manner which appears to them fit and proper. Animals revenge themselves frequently for wrongs they have suffered, and many interesting cases of retribution or punishment inflicted by animals are on record.

The Asiastic elephant has the well-founded reputation of never forgetting any wrong or injury done to him, and it is known that he often waits for a long time for an opportunity to take revenge.

Captain Shippe, an officer in India, had once given to an elephant a sandwich the butter of which had been mixed with a strong dose of cayenne pepper. Six weeks later he visited the elephant again. At first he was received by the animal like any other ordinary visitor, but after a few moments the elephant filled his trunk with dirty water and gave the officer a vigorous shower bath.

The following interesting anecdote is told by Griffith: It was in 1805, during the siege of Burtporte, in India. The intense summer heat and the stifling winds had dried up the springs and small water courses, and there was but one large well which still contained water for men and beasts. One day two elephants were taken to the well by their keepers. One of the animals, a large, fierce bull of enormous strength, took away from the other physically inferior elephant the bucket for drawing water, which it carried with its trunk. The two keepers began to quarrel about the bucket, but the smaller elephant did not seem to be inclined to resent the bold attack of the other pachyderm. He was merely waiting, however, for a favorable opportunity to revenge himself upon the stronger brute. After awhile the large elephant stood near the well, with one side toward the water. The smaller elephant quietly retreated a short distance in the most innocent manner. The next moment he made a rush for the big bull, and with his head butted him into the well.

A remarkable instance of concerted action among animals for the purpose of punishing an offender was reported in an English magazine some time ago. A farmer near London was in the habit of driving to one of the suburban towns every morning to sell his milk. He was invariably accompanied by his dog, a faithful but vicious mongrel, always ready to attack smaller dogs, but extremely careful not to get into any trouble with larger and more formidable dogs. For several months Victor, as the mongrel was called, was the terror of all the dogs along the milkman's route, but finally the day of reckoning and retribution came. In some manner, which no one can explain, a silent agitation had been brewing among the dogs of the district. On a certain day scores of dogs of every description met upon the public square and after the sun had gone down the whole pack proceeded to the farm of the milkman. On the following morning the owner of the farm found Victor in front of his door, almost exhausted from loss of blood and covered with a multitude of bites and scratches. After long and careful nursing Victor recovered, but he was no longer the mean and vicious brute that he had been. He rose from his sickbed a changed and reformed dog. He no longer attacked and tormented the small dogs along the route, but confined himself strictly to the protection of his master's property.

An English clergyman tells a story about a rooster who bossed the whole farmyard in the most tyrannical fashion. He would not allow the ducks to hunt for food in the yard and drove them away, viciously attacking them with his beak. The ducks finally revolted. After a short consultation they formed a circle around the rooster and began to draw in closer and closer. Threatened from all sides, the rooster fled, glad to have escaped with all his feathers. After that he never interfered with the ducks and they went about the yard without fear or violence from the autocratic rooster.

The spirit of revenge is also well developed in monkeys. Sir Andrew Smith, the English zoologist, reports an interesting case which he saw with his own eyes. One Sunday morning a certain officer, who had often teased and ill-treated a baboon kept in the officers' quarters, was on his way to dress parade, when the baboon espied him. Quickly the animal poured some water in a little trough formed by a depression in the ground and mixed a mud paste, with which he pelted the officer from head to foot when the hated tormentor passed near the spot.

A portion of the cone of Mount Vesuvius has fallen in and large horizontal crevices are observed in the peak of the mountain in the direction of Pompeii. Precautions have been adopted against possible landslips.

PROGRESSIVE PIGEONS.

Pigeons in Cardiff seem to desire to live up to the progressive spirit of the town. For on the very day the electric trams began running a visitor at the Royal hotel found that a pigeon had come in through the open window and laid an egg in his hat.—Western Mail.

DISHONESTY IN ANIMALS

"Speaking of degenerates," said an observant citizen, "I have often wondered why it was that some scientific man didn't take up the criminal instinct frequently found in animals of the lower order. I am not talking about the general lack of sense of right or wrong found in animals of a lower order, but I am referring to certain domestic animals, like dogs, horses, cats and other specimens of this class. Dogs often steal just for the sake of stealing. I have known dogs to break into storehouses, steal a lot of food and carry it away to a hiding place at some safe distance from the house. Dogs often acquire the habit of sucking eggs, and in rural sections farmers have experienced much trouble in protecting nests of hens against the pilfering animals. It is one of the most difficult things in the world to break a dog of the egg-sucking habit. The fact that the dog is well fed has no tendency to arrest the inclination to steal. The dog may live in positive affluence, but when night falls he begins to slip around, and he will steal if there is any chance to steal. He may not be hungry. He will take the booty away and bury it.

"I recall the case of a dog which had been systematically robbing a farmer's smoke house. One night he stole a whole ham. The farmer had been missing little things for some time. In a day or so he happened to see the dog hanging around an old hollow tree not far from the barn. He thought the dog's action a little suspicious, and so he made an investigation. He was startled to find the missing ham and a whole lot of other things hidden away in the old hollow tree. Dogs are often the very worst kind of thieves.

"Cows frequently get into the thieving habit of breaking into a cornfield at some remote place where discovery is well nigh impossible. Cats learn to steal things from the cupboard. Horses acquire the dishonest habit of slipping the bridle when the rider's back is turned. The old story about the mule that picked the lock on the crib door with a snagged tooth is not a legend. I have seen many mules of the kind, and, in fact, this thing we call degeneracy is not by any means confined to members of the human family.

"Men like Darwin, and naturalists of this kind have called attention to the thieving nature of certain lower orders of life, the system of piracy carried on by certain birds, and things of this kind, but it has occurred to me that we might find an interesting field of inquiry by taking up the domestic animals. I am inclined to believe that some very interesting cases could be reported."

PRESIDENT A PEDESTRIAN.

President Roosevelt repeatedly gives exhibitions of his prowess as a long distance walker. He walks whenever the fit seizes him and has no regular hour for either walking or riding.

An intimate friend from Boston has reason to remember that the president is no ordinary walker, and will probably not be so quick to accept an invitation the next time he visits Washington. Three days ago this friend called at the white house, and after an interview with the president was asked to wait a few minutes while some business was being attended to, after which the president would be glad to have his company for a walk.

At 3 o'clock p. m., an hour later, they started off together, walked rapidly out beyond Georgetown, thence to Cabin John bridge, seven miles away, and back to the Chain bridge, which they crossed. Coming down on the Virginia side through brush and woods they again crossed the Potomac by the Aqueduct bridge, reaching the white house at 7 o'clock, after traveling more than sixteen miles.

The visitor had an engagement to dine with Senator Lodge informally at 7:30 p. m., and was barely able to reach his hotel. He telephoned the senator that all that was left of him would soon be in bed; that he had been walking with the president and the senator would understand.—Baltimore Sun.

THE MYSTERY OF VOLCANOES

SCIENCE BAFFLED FOR A SOLUTION OF THESE MOST DESTRUCTIVE AND APPALLING PHENOMENA.

While all the world stands aghast at the mighty volcanic disturbances which have wrought such horrors in the West Indies within a week, the world of science stands quite as helplessly before the question, What is a volcano?

At the same time scientists have dared death in its most appalling forms in order to study volcanoes actually at work in the hope of snatching from them the secret of their being. Thus in the year 1767 Sir William Hamilton dared the terrors of Vesuvius in one of its most violent eruptions in order to question it in scientific fashion of its phenomena and their cause.

The volcano had been throwing out dust, scoria, and gigantic "bombs" for months. It was hazardous in the extreme even to approach it. Yet so greatly did the scientific eagerness to know dominate Sir William's mind that he boldly went up the mountain to the highest point attainable. Fortunately for science he went on the day when the great outburst of lava occurred, and at fearful risk to himself he saw what happened.

SCIENTIST'S DEED OF DARING.

"On a sudden, about noon," says Sir William, "I hear a violent noise within the mountain, and at a spot about a quarter of a mile off the place where I stood the mountain split; and with much noise from this new mouth a fountain of liquid fire shot up many feet high, and then, like a torrent, rolled on directly toward us. The earth shook at the same time that a volley of pumice stones fell thick upon us. In an instant clouds of black smoke and ashes caused almost total darkness; the explosions from the top of the mountain were much louder than any thunder I ever heard, and the smell of the sulphur was offensive. My guide, alarmed, took to his heels, and I must confess that I was not at my ease; I followed close, and we ran nearly three miles without stopping. As the earth continued to shake under our feet I was apprehensive of the opening of a fresh mouth, which might cut off our retreat. I also feared that the violent explosions might detach some of the rocks off the mountain of Somma, under which we were obliged to pass; besides the pumice stones, falling upon us like hail, were of such a size as to cause disagreeable sensations."

STUDYING THEIR CAUSES.

Besides such risky study—including the late Professor Palmieri's daring life residence near the lip of the crater—science has prosecuted other and laborious researches into the causes of volcanic action. Careful calculations have been made to determine where the heat might come from, until we now know almost exactly how much rock must be pulverized by pressure in order to produce the temperatures of 2,000 degrees to 3,000 degrees Farenheit, which have been found in the craters.

And yet we do not know today with any sort of certainty or satisfaction what it is that causes volcanic action. There are many scientific theories, but each of them has been challenged by scientific criticism which apparently it cannot endure.

For ages it has been recognized as a giant chimney, built by the actions of the subterranean fires. Likewise these chimneys have been associated always with contiguous salt water. As to the hand that set the fires and as to the conditions which control these chimneys giving vent to the fires of an under world, speculation has been rife for a thousand years. In general, superheated steam under the earth's crust is regarded as the active agent in a volcanic eruption. With most volcanoes, active or extinct, standing in proximity to sea water, the connection of steam with the phenomenon has been easy. Accounting for the subterranean fires has been the task.

Once it was argued that sea water, sinking to great depths below the ocean beds, encountered unoxidized metals, such as potassium and sodium, and in the contact generated heat sufficient to melt the surrounding rocks. As a result of this decomposition volumes of gases were liberated with a force sufficient to lift the molten rock to the orifice of a volcanic cone; or if no such vent were present, this force, in the form of an earthquake, might lay half a continent in ruins.

But whether this theory or the theory of a gradually cooling planet be accepted, the volcano in eruption holds its place in the earth's phenomena as one of the most awe-inspiring of natural forces, as it easily may be one of the most destructive.

HOME OF THE VOLCANO.

Taking the map of the world, one sees the margins of the Pacific as well as its mighty bed to be the home of the volcano. All down the eastern coast of Asia and extending out into the tropical islands of the south Pacific is a continuous chain of volcanoes, active within recent times; across the north Pacific, from Alaska to Kamschatka, are the craters in the Aleutian islands, forming almost a bridge over the Pacific, and from Alaska down the western coast of the North and South American continents is a string of the mightiest volcanoes in existence. Iceland is a seething caldron under its eternal snows, and in a hundred places where some great, jagged cone of a volcano rises, seemingly dead and lifeless, only a firebrand in the hand of nature may be needed to awaken it to a fury like that of which its vast lava beds, pinnacles and craters are so eloquent.

In general, those volcanoes which have had longest periods of rest between eruptions have been most violent, and as a rule those cones sending out ashes are of the worst type. The theory of a long quiescent volcano breaking out with such renewed force is that the vent in the crater becomes choked by cooling rock until, when some sudden burst of steam forces an eruption, the whole top of the cone may be blown away. As to the extent of an eruption of a great volcano, Skaptan Jokul, in Iceland, in 1783 made one of the world's records.

THE GREATEST ERUPTION.

The eruption began on June 11 of that year, having been preceded by violent earthquakes. A torrent of lava welled up into the crater, overflowed it, and ran down the sides of the cone into the channel of the River Skapta, completely drying it up. The river had occupied a rocky gorge from 400 to 600 feet deep and averaging 200 feet wide. This gorge was filled, a deep lake was filled, and the rock, still at white heat, flowed on into subterranean caverns. Tremendous explosions followed, throwing bowlders to enormous heights. A week after the first eruption another stream of lava followed the first, debouched over a precipice into the channel of another river, and finally, at the end of two years, the lava had spread over the plains below in great lakes twelve to fifteen miles wide and a hundred feet deep. Twenty villages were destroyed by fire, and out of 50,000 inhabitants nearly 9,000 perished, either from fire or from noxious vapors. The Skapta river branch of this lava was fifty miles long and in places twelve to fifteen miles wide; the other stream was forty miles long, seven miles broad, and the range of depth in each stream was from 100 to 600 feet. Prof. Bischof has called this, in quantity, the greatest eruption of the world, the lava, piled, having been estimated as of greater volume than is Mont Blanc.

CAN'T RELY ON EXTINCTION.

Volcanoes in general occupy three classes—the active, the quiescent and the extinct craters. History has proved, however, that the term "extinct" is only relative; that cones which for ages have seemed dead suddenly have broken out with all the furies of the under world. Etna, for instance, had been classed as active in the Odyssey, while for a thousand years before 79 A. D. Vesuvius had been regarded as extinct. In that year, however, it burst forth in eruption in a manner to force the story of it to the end of history. In the years in which Vesuvius was quiet, however, the volcanoes on the island of Ischia, forming one of the arms of the Bay of Naples and known to have belonged to the Vesuvian chain, were active; after the stupendous outbreak of Vesuvius in 79, however, these volcanoes slumbered for 1,700 years. To all appearances they were extinct, when, after all these centuries, they became active again.

With reference to these volcanoes and this volcanic district, other vents were open in this 1,700 years, and earthquakes were of frequent occurrence. This would tend to show that the volcanic conditions were still in existence and more or less potent. Today, speaking of extinct volcanoes, those of the Andes in South America seem to be most certainly of this class. But no one in the scientific world today has the temerity to say just where is the volcanic cone that is dead past all awakening.

In general, the Mississippi Valley is not interested in vital ways concerning the volcano or its earthquaking accompaniment. It is conceded that the Valley of the Mississippi had its experiences with molten lava long before recorded time, and the glacial drift has buried most of it hundreds of feet below the city datum of Chicago. In the Lake Superior country, however, in the copper and iron deposits of the region, are to be found the evidences of volcanic heat among the rocks. Thus, lacking anything approaching a vent or cone the valley of the great river may be regarded as secure from a possible eruption, however little the modern scientist claims to know of the phenomena.

world of today is willing to go on record as having a theory of his own regarding the internal fires of this planet or attempt to account for their origin. One of the western authorities in geology has put it pointedly in the statement: "The fires of the nether and material world, physically, are in just the same category as are the fires of that lake of fire which have been so much in question in the spiritual world."

In the midst of so much uncertainty regarding the volcano and its connection with the fires of the under world, several points are agreed upon as logical upon the face of the phenomenon. For instance, it is agreed that steam is one of the potent elements in the explosive effects that mark the eruption. Just how this steam is generated, however, is a question. It is accepted as a fact that at a depth of five miles the pressure of the earth's crust is so great that no seams or fissure are possible in which water might be held. At this depth, too, it is not believed that rock is in a sufficiently heated state to produce the phenomenon of a volcanic eruption. This presupposes that if water causes steam it must come in contact with the molten rock long after it has risen above the level of the sea. And, yet, there is the further truth that most active cones have been, and are, near the sea.

EACH CONE INDEPENDENT.

Efforts have been made to connect the subterranean sources of volcanoes. While they have shown a disposition to align themselves, the general theory favors the supposition that each cone is more or less independent of its neighbors. This has been demonstrated in the spectacle of a tall volcano, in the neighborhood of one much smaller, remaining active for years, while the small one just as steadily refused to erupt.

As to volcanoes in the history of the world, more than 500 have been discovered and named. In their eruptions the principal materials thrown out have been lava, ashes, mud, steam, sulphur and such gases as hydrochloric, carbonic and sulphurous acids, boric acid, ammonia, free hydrogen and the vapors of mercury, antimony and arsenic. In some of the emanations from craters and crevasses in the Island of Java it has been thought the story of the fabled upas tree found root. From end to end this island is a chain of vents and craters, which, when active, have thrown out mud instead of lava, and along with this mud have come sulphurous vapors, and even sulphuric acid, in such quantities that a lake near a crater is so strongly impregnated as to kill every living thing that enters its waters. Not only this, but the steam which flows out of the lake is so acrid that the fishes of the sea near the mouth of the river are destroyed the moment they touch it.

VOLCANOES INJURE THEMSELVES.

In this island of Java is a remarkable example of a volcano's suffering from its own titanic forces. Papandayang, in 1772, undermined itself in an eruption to such an extent that its crater fell inward, taking down with it a district fifteen miles long and nearly six miles wide. More than forty villages were destroyed and 3,000 lives are said to have been lost. In this settling of the cone the height was reduced from 9,000 to 5,000 feet.

In the formation of a volcano the growth is that of cooling lava, which is erupted and flows down the sides of a gradually increasing shell. The eruption of lava tends to produce a much flatter cone than does ash, and in some volcanoes where there is a prevailing cool wind from a certain direction the side of the crater to the windward is higher than on any other side. In eruption the character of the lava emitted may vary greatly in consistency, though coming from the same crater. For instance, the Vesuvian lava, in the eruption of 1858, was of a peculiarly ropy nature, due to its lack of fusibility. In 1872, however, the lava that overflowed was at a white heat and flowed rapidly down the sides of the cone.

EFFECT ON ICELAND.

Iceland, as one of the hotbeds of volcanic energy, presents in marked manner the ills that come upon a district which suffers from volcanic eruptions. Hecla, for instance, has been shown to be active for a period of six years at a time. While throwing out its vapors, fumes, and solids, the people of the island contiguous to the volcano have verged upon starvation. Their principal food supply comes from their fisheries and from their cattle. As to the fishing, it is practically destroyed because of the vast amount of hot lava that is discharged into the sea and because of the activity of boiling springs which pour hot water into the neighboring ocean.

As for the cattle, they suffer in a most peculiar manner. The ashes and pumice stone are thrown to great heights and settle in great clouds upon the pastures. Aside from this making the grass tasteless, the cattle, in trying to eat in pasture, take the ashes and fine pumice into their mouths. This cuts the enamel from their teeth, finally leaving the brutes in such misery that they cannot eat the grass that is there for their sustenance, and they die of slow starvation. On many occasions Denmark has been called upon to aid the Icelanders in such emergencies.

WORLD'S GREATEST VOLCANO.

With the annexation of the Hawaiian islands the United States acquired the greatest volcano in the world. Soon after this annexation Kilauea tried to show itself to a spectacular advantage, but the display did not last long. This vast crater of Kilauea is always active in a sense, however, and at least ten times in the last century it gave demonstrations of its power. In 1855 the great crater, more than three miles across, poured 38,000,000,000 cubic feet of molten lava down the sides of the cone. In 1859 a stream of lava ran fifty miles from the mountain, covering the distance in eight days. In these islands, also, the United States government acquired some other mighty volcanoes. Mauna Kea, Mauna Loa, and Mauna Hualali are three of the principal cones, the two first named standing more than 18,000 feet high. Kilauea, as an active crater, however, is greatest of all, presenting the picture of a lake of fire and brimstone nearly nine miles in circumference. Looking over this vast lake of fire, at boiling point, one sees vapors rising through the molten mass, lifting balloon-like cones of molten rock from the surface, spreading them, and finally bursting the balloon, sending fiery showers into the air, the hot liquid falling back, unsolidified, into the cauldron. Everywhere this process of bubble-making and bubble-breaking is going on, throwing a continuous shower of fiery spray into the air.

When this great cauldron overflowed in 1840 it had been preceded by violent earthquakes. On this occasion the lava flowed through some subterranean fissure, emerging from the earth at a height of 1,250 feet above sea level. In two days it had traveled eleven miles, plunging into the ocean with tremendous detonations. So much lava was exuded that the coast line was extended more than a quarter of a mile, and the surrounding ocean was so heated that dead fish floated ashore for ten miles on each side of the cataract.

CRATERS IN UNITED STATES.

Regarding the volcanoes of the United States proper, Mount Shasta is one of the most interesting of them. It has an altitude of 14,350 feet, towering more than a mile above its nearest neighbor. Four thousand feet of its peak are above timber line, covered with glaciers, while the mountain's base is seventeen miles in diameter. Shasta is almost continually showing slight evidences of its internal fires.

Another of the famous cones is that of Mount Hood, standing 11,225 feet, snow-capped, and regarded as extinct as a volcano. Other peaks are Mount Baker, Mount Rainier, Mount St. Helens, Mount Adams, Mount Jefferson, Three Sisters, Mounts Mazama, Scott, Union, Pitt, Lassen Peak, Spanish Peaks, and Mount Taylor.

As to the volcanic records of the great west, they may be read in the great chains of mountains that stretch from Alaska, 10,000 miles to Terra del Fuego. In the giant geysers and hot springs of the Yellowstone Park are evidences of existing fires in the United States, while as to the extent of seismic disturbances of the past, the famous Lava Beds, in which Captain Jack, the Modoc chief, held out against United States troops till starved into submission, are volcanic areas full of mute testimony regarding nature's convulsions. These lava beds are mazes of intricate passages in the rocks, formed by the processes of cooling and settling.

ERUPTION OF KRAKATOA.

Prior to the recent convulsions of Mont Pelee, at Martinique, the most remarkable of volcanic eruptions in recent years was that of Krakatoa, in the Straits of Sunda, in 1883. It is estimated that ash and fragments from this cone were lifted 50,000 feet in the air, and that the finer particles of pumice were a year in reaching the earth again. With these ash layers drifting with the winds, the sunsets of that year were made remarkably brilliant and are remembered by most people old enough at the time to be attracted to the phenomenon.

Not only in this dust was the eruption made spectacular, but vessels sailing the East Indian seas thereafter encountered such vast areas of floating pumice stone that navigation was seriously impeded. Gradually this stone became waterlogged and sank, however. Fifty thousand lives are said to have been lost in this eruption, and every vestige of life on that and neighboring islands destroyed.

One of the noteworthy facts connected with the destructive upheaval of Krakatoa was that the humble peak, less than 3,000 feet in heighth, has attracted no special attention among scientists because of the region in which it stood. It was located in the midst of about fifty towering volcanic mountains, some of them 12,000 feet high, and most of them in almost chronic disturbance. In the midst of these surroundings little Krakatoa was overlooked until almost ten years ago it broke out with terrible fury and wrought fearful loss of life and destruction of property.

For the first few hours terrific explosions came every few minutes. The sea was driven back, and at every outburst black columns of smoke, dust and lava were sent miles into the air. As the hours passed the explosions became more and more frequent. The concussions shattered stone walls, upset lamps and created general havoc hundreds of miles away. The explosions were heard over a sound zone covering one-thirteenth of the earth's surface. All the towns and villages on the shores of Java and Sumatra bordering the straits were destroyed. The average heighth of the tidal wave which struck the shores of Java and Sumatra was fifty feet, and at many places it was much higher. A man-of-war lying off the Sumatra shore was carried a mile and three-quarters inland up a valley and left in a forest thirty feet above sea level.

A large part of the Indian ocean was showered with lavadust and lava mud to a depth of several inches, and in the immediate vicinity of Krakatoa the sea was so thick with fallen lava dust that vessels pushed through it as though plodding through a field of broken ice. The whole northern portion of the island, with an average height of 700 feet above sea level, was submerged, and remains so today under 150 fathoms of water.

TWO STRANGE MALADIES.

Very few persons have heard of the disease known as astasia and akathisia, yet, according to M. Henri de Parville, a French authority on medical subjects, some notable cases of them have been recently found.

"Astasia," he says, "is a nervous affection, the peculiar feature of which is the fact that a person suffering from it cannot stand upright. If he tries he will be obliged to hop and jump whenever his feet touch the ground. In a word, his actions are precisely those of a person who might be required to stand upright on a floor composed of red-hot coal. Fortunately there are not many cases of this malady on record.

"Akathisia is the exact opposite of astasia, since a person suffering from it cannot remain seated. The moment he sets himself in a chair he is obliged to start up again. Dr. Haskovic, of Prague, has been studying this disease, and tells of two notable cases.

"The first case was that of a man 40 years old, who was frequently attacked with hysteria. Whenever he sat down he sprang up again, and up and down in this manner he went several times until he succeeded in getting away from the chair. In the second case, which was that of a man 54 years old, the patient was sometimes able to remain seated for a while, but the fit invariably seized him sooner or later and forced him to spring away from the chair.

"A person afflicted with akathisia can walk easily, but cannot sit, whereas a person suffering from astasia cannot stand upright, and cannot walk in the ordinary manner, owing to the contraction of his lower limbs."

THE SULTAN AND PING PONG.

When will ping pong cease its all-conquering advance? It has set society scrambling on all fours; it has invaded the hospitals, no self-respecting tavern is now without it, and every department in the civil service has its club team.

The latest and least-to-be-expected place it has conquered is the harem of the sultan of Turkey, wherein it flourishes exceedingly, the efforts of his fat ladies to get the ball over the net affording, it is said, the "purple emperor" much amusement. His opinion on the merits of the game will no doubt be slightly altered the first time a stray ball hits him in his imperial eye.

MEDALS FOR WOMEN.

Thirty-three decorations have been issued to French women for acts of bravery in war time. It is half a century since France began to award medals of honor to women. Nearly all so honored were "cantinieres," a picturesque feature of the French army which still endures. The best known of all these plucky women, however, was Mlle. Dodu, telegrapher, who saved the army of the Loire in the dark days of 1870. Her office at Pithiviers was occupied by Prince Frederick Charles, who seized the telegraph lines and instruments and confined Mlle. Dodu, with her mother and maid servant, in the upper part of the house. Nothing daunted by this, Mlle. Dodu, who had extra instruments, managed to "tap" the line used by the Germans and intercepted their messages, which she promptly forwarded to General D'Aurelle de Pladines, who, warned in time, managed to thwart the Prussian plan to capture his forces. For seventeen days she worked with hardly any sleep. She was betrayed finally by the maid servant who assisted her, and was condemned to be shot, but sentence was finally remitted. For this act she received not only the medal, but the red ribbon as well, and has the distinction of being the only woman wearing the two decorations given to soldiers.

WINE OF CARDUI has brought relief to over a million women during the years of its existence. It is a thoroughly scientific and modern remedy, meeting the needs of the modern women in the modern way —without the torture of an operation. Women are modest. Modesty is their charm and because Wine of Cardui appeals to women's modesty by curing them in the privacy of their homes it has found a place in the hearts of American women that no other medicine has found. In their gratitude over 10,000 American women have written letters commending Wine of Cardui. Wine of Cardui meets their wants as no other medicine does. It sustains the young girl at the shock of her entrance to womanhood. Women who take Wine of Cardui have little discomfort during pregnancy and little pain at childbirth. When the change of life appears they enter a happy, healthy old age. Every month it comes to the rescue to assist Nature in throwing the impurities from the body.

Miss Sarah Finley, of Memphis, Tenn., Vice-President of the Palmetto Club of that city, speaks for herself and many friends when she bestows the following praise on Wine of Cardui:

"Among the numerous medicines placed before suffering women for their relief none can touch McElree's Wine of Cardui. It towers above them all as a reliable female remedy. It simply drives pain and disease away and restores health in an incredibly short period. I have taken great interest in this medicine for the past two years, since it brought health and strength to me. I have also recommended it to a number of my friends and they who have used it speak of it in the highest terms and I feel that it is praise well bestowed."

If you are suffering from female weakness Wine of Cardui is the medicine you need. Mrs. Lizzie C. Ward, of Bowmans, Va., says so.

"Wine of Cardui is doing me lots of good. I feel better than I have for some time. My menses are all right now and I feel better at this time than I have ever felt in my life. I think it is a grand medicine."

Mrs. S. L. Horton, of Tampa, Fla., says so.

"I have taken Wine of Cardui for some time and I am glad to say it does me more good than anything else I have ever taken. I have told so many about it. I have taken six bottles and have also given it to my daughter."

Miss Emma Harris, of Charlottesville, Va., says so.

"Wine of Cardui is just what it is put up for. There is nothing like it. I would be in my grave were it not for Wine of Cardui and I hope every woman will give it a trial."

You can have health the same as these women if you will take the Wine of Cardui treatment. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles.

If you need advice further than the complete directions given on the bottle, address The Ladies' Advisory Department, The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Practical Philanthropy

One Rich Man Who Does Not Agree With Andrew Carnegie's Ideas.

HON. PETER GENDRON.

Hon. Peter Gendron, of Toledo, O., a retired capitalist and inventor, has given up the management of his mammoth iron works to search for health and strength, and was cured before he could complete his plans for crossing the ocean, has novel views as to the mission of the rich man. "I would not take a bit of credit away from Andrew Carnegie in his work of founding free libraries," he says, "but my plain American idea of it is that we ought to look after the people's bodies first. If I am able to give ten thousand people pure blood, health and strength, isn't it better than giving them books to read when they don't want to read? I vowed nothing could tempt me back into business when I was cured by Lorenz's Blood Remedy. Now I'm President of the Lorenz Medicine Co., and working night and day to let people know how I was cured. If my time and money can make people well, I'll be content. I get thousands of letters from suffering friends, and I answer them all. Our physician, Dr. Richard Whitefield, gives each case his personal attention by mail. Thousands and thousands of people have taken the medicine, and it would do your heart good to read their letters. As fast as we can we are working from town to town, and we hope it won't be long before Lorenz's Blood Remedy will be in every drug store in the United States."

Mr. Gendron says he can cure the worst cases of Rheumatism, Scrofula, Catarrh, Blood Poisoning, or any ailment arising from impure blood.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson for Sunday, May 25, 1902.

Topic—"Paul at Antioch in Pisidia."

Text—Acts xiii., 43-52.

Golden Text—"Through this man is preached to you the forgiveness of sin." Acts xiii., 38.

FROM CYPRUS TO ANTIOCH.

Leaving Paphos, Paul, Barnabas and John Mark sailed to Perga, the seaport of Pamphylia, situated on the lowlands of the coast. They probably arrived in the month of July, and as this is a particularly unhealthy time of year in that region, they seem to have done no preaching and to have made a very brief stay there.

Some have thought that the "thorn in the flesh," of which Paul speaks in the epistle to the Corinthians, was a malarial fever contracted here on this occasion, and that he refers to this in his epistle to the Galatians when he says "through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at first." It has also been suggested that the reason for John Mark's departure from Paul and Barnabas at this time that he might return to his home was owing to an attack of this malady. These are simply matters of conjecture, but they serve to illustrate what may have been the physical hindrances with which the apostles often had to contend.

From Perga Paul and Barnabas passed to Antioch of Pisidia, the scene of our present lesson.

PAUL IN THE SYNAGOGUE AT ANTIOCH.

The verses preceding the section chosen for our study tell of Paul's preaching in the synagogue at Antioch. Quite a full report of his address is given by Luke, and it shows how Paul grounded his appeal to the Jews upon the dealings of God with their nation from earliest times.

Evidently the words of the apostle left a deep impression upon many of his hearers, for they asked that he would again speak unto them the following Sabbath.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

The scene enacted at the synagogue when Paul preached there for the second time was suggestive of a great revival. Almost the whole city, we are told, came together that they might hear the words of the preacher. Yet here, as often elsewhere, the work of grace was opposed by those who were out of sympathy with the cause which Paul presented, for the Jews saw in the triumph of the gospel the overturning of the law, whose letter they so fondly cherished, and yet whose spirit they had utterly missed.

A LIGHT TO THE GENTILES.

It is at this juncture of the apostolic history that Paul is providentially led to declare himself as God's appointed ambassador to the Gentiles, whom the Jews so greatly despised. Christianity was never designed for the Jews alone, to the exclusion of the Gentiles, but the Jews in Antioch, by their refusal to receive the gospel, put themselves, as it were, beyond the pale, and compelled Paul to announce himself as sent especially to the Gentiles, because they alone showed themselves ready to accept the gospel.

PAUL AND BANABAS CAST OUT.

The disaffected Jews were not content with simply opposing the preaching of the gospel by counter arguments. They proceeded to more stringent measures, and raised such a tumult that at last they forced Paul and Barnabas to leave the city, which they did, shaking off the dust of their feet as a testimony against them, even as the Master Himself had given direction to his disciples. This did not mean that the apostles themselves pronounced an irrevocable doom against them, but it indicated that these Jews, by their own rejection of the truth, had cut themselves off from the hope of salvation.

JOY IN BELIEVING.

From Antioch the apostles passed into Iconium, but as they went, they rejoiced over those that had received the gospel in Antioch, and the disciples whom they left in that city among the Gentiles rejoiced greatly in believing and were filled with the Holy Spirit.

The joy which these early Christian converts experienced is the natural and blessed heritage of every believer in Christ. This and this alone is the source of that peace which passeth understanding, which the world cannot give and which it cannot take away.

At Robison Park Theatre.

ROBISON PARK OPENING.

Never before in the history of Fort Wayne have such preparations been gone to as the attractions for the Park theater this summer. An examination into the merits of the performances will find that it is due the greatest of success and as an exemplary bill of vaudeville, that which will be presented for the opening week, starting tomorrow, may be said that it is hardly without an equal, including in its make up some of the stars of this popular branch of amusement. Such comedians, such pretty girls, such performing animals, such bright specialties, such a mingling of mirth and melody has never been offered before. In fact it is a new venture in presenting only the very best and as a consequence it is likely to bring into use the dust laden S. R. O. sign, which has lain idle this winter awaiting the opening. The press have indorsed the acts and the public has given the theaters in which they have played material support and the patrons of the park will not be disappointed if they expect to see something unusually good. Especially when the features are such as: Galleti and his troupe of wonderful animal actors, who can do everything but talk and even that almost by making signs. Next are the Garrisons, the greatest of their kind in the profession, of whom the city of Chicago raved so much about. The humorous conversationalists, Burton and Brooks will present the farce, "A Quiet Evening at the Club." This is one of the funniest of modern short vaudeville comedies and the comedians who are the stars are funnier still. The songs and stories which they introduce are all new, original and interesting. Miss Gladys Van, the dainty little comedienne, will sing a number of the latest song successes. Miss Van is a person of charming appearance, with a rare voice and usually captivates an audience the minute she steps upon the stage. Dave Nowlin another feature of the bill is an actor of great ability.

Burton and Brooks at Robison Park Theater Next Week.

GUIDE TO TRAVELERS.

The circular which the secretary of the treasury expects to issue as a guide to tourists leaving the United States for a brief period and liable to bring back more or less personal baggage, will be ready for distribution in a few days at the outside. Its most noteworthy feature will be a popular schedule of duties on the sort of articles an American tourist, particularly a woman, would be likely to bring back. A person who travels with a trunk or two, or even a dozen, does not, for instance, bring home in them Portland cement or marble in the block, or iron ore, or metal girders and beams, or anvils, or railroad ties, or telegraph poles, or cattle, or coal, or hides, or bags of salt.

The absurdity of setting a bewildered woman delving through the whole tariff law to find out whether she has anything dutiable in her bags and boxes seemed to Mr. Shaw too evident to call for comment; yet that has been hitherto the only chance of escape from making a false declaration. So the happy idea occurred to him of putting together a simple list of the dutiable things which tourists commonly do carry about them, such as various articles of clothing, small toilet appurtenances, dress goods in the piece, jewelry, etc., as at once a guide and a reminder, in filling out a declaration, and also as a standard by which a traveler would be able, while making his purchases abroad, to estimate in the rough the amount of the tax likely to be imposed upon his belongings when he carries them home.

This he has ordered put into language which the average traveler can understand, encumbered with as few technical terms as possible. His hope is to make this list helpful rather than merely formal, and its final revision will be the work of his own pen.

PORTRAIT OF A GREAT MAN

PICTURE OF HUGH M'CULLOCH FOR TIPPECANOE CLUB.

Presentation Will Be Made Wednesday Night—Blaine's Estimate of the Great Financier.

The action of the Tippecanoe club in making the reception of a portrait of the late Hugh McCulloch an occasion for a public testimonial to his name and services to the American people has brought about a revival of interest in this noted man, a citizen of Fort Wayne a score of years ago.

Probably everybody in Fort Wayne knows there is a park bearing the name of the financier, publicist and statesman, but do not recall whether it was conferred in honor of the founder of the national banking system or of the present president of the Hamilton National bank, on the corner of Calhoun and Main streets.

The founder of the name in this city, however, was Hugh McCulloch, father of Mr. Charles McCulloch, who presented the handsomely framed portrait to the Tippecanoe club. The formal ceremony of acceptance will be held next Wednesday night at the Wayne club house, when the following program will be observed:

Overture ..... Orchestra
Remarks .....
W. C. Geake, President Tippecanoe Club
Selection .....
Linden, Haydn and Apollo Quartets
Remarks .....
.....Mr. Charles McCulloch
Solo—Selected.....Mrs. S. C. Moffat
Address of Acceptance on Behalf of the Club.....Hon. R. S. Taylor
Solo—Selected ....Frank E. Stouder
"The Last Chord" .....
Linden, Haydn and Apollo Quartets.
Accompanist ....Mrs. F. E. Stouder

To this ceremony, which is to be followed by social features, including a dance from 10.30 to 1:30, 500 invitations have been issued and the prominence of the orators as well as the timeliness of the occasion, promise to make it one of the notable social events of a year prolific in such affairs.

The career of the man whose name is thus honored was one of the most brilliant in the financial history of the country and ranks with that of John Sherman, under whose administration of the treasury the country returned to a specie basis, accomplishing what was commonly referred to as "the resumption of specie payment." Secretary Sherman did no more than Mr. McCulloch toward restoring the credit of this country, but he was more fortunate in his political environment and reaped the results of the foundation laid by his predecessor.

BLAINE'S TRIBUTE.

James G. Blaine in his "Twenty Years in Congress," in speaking of Mr. McCulloch's appointment, says:

"When Mr. Fessenden left the treasury, he was succeeded by Hugh McCulloch, whose valuable services as comptroller of the currency had secured him the promotion with which Mr. Lincoln now honored him. Mr. McCulloch was a native of Maine, who had gone to the west in his early manhood, and had earned a strong position as a business man in his Indiana home." He was a descendant of that small, but prolific colony of Scotch and Scotch-Irish, who had settled in northern New England, and whose blood has enriched all who have had the good fortune to inherit it. Mr. McCulloch was a devoted whig, and was so loyal to the union that during the war he could do nothing else than to give his influence to the republican party. But he was hostile to the creed of the abolitionist, was conservative in all his modes of thought, and wished the union restored quite regardless of the fate of the negro. He believed that unwise discussion of the negro question had brought our troubles upon us, and that it would be inexcusable to continue an agitation which portended trouble in another form. The policy which he desired to see adopted was that which should restore the rebel states to their old relations with the union upon the freest possible conditions and within the shortest possible time."

In the first volume of Mr. Blaine's work, page 478, appears the following regarding Mr. McCulloch:

"The currency bureau of the treasury department provided for in the national banking act was organized by the appointment of Hugh McCulloch, who was then the head of one of the largest banking institutions in Indiana. He was recognized as possessing executive capacity and large experience in financial affairs. He had originally been opposed, as had many others interested in state banks, to the national banking act, but as he says, the more he examined the 'system' the more it grew into favor with him day by day.' This appears to have been the result with all who gave the subject a fair and candid consideration, even when biased with personal interests or political prejudice."

It was thus that Mr. McCulloch became connected with the Lincoln administration and with the financial system in the reconstruction period. On page 320, volume 2, Mr. Blaine says: "The leading feature of Mr. McCulloch's financial policy was the immediate and persistent contraction of the currency."

It must be remembered that the country had just emerged from a costly war, conducted on a paper basis and that restored credit predicted on a contraction of paper currency.

"His argument," continued Mr. Blaine, "in support of this policy, as given in his annual report, was not accepted by the country or the congress without serious reservation; but his belief in the theory was strong and determined, and so far as the laws permitted he went on reducing the volume of paper in circulation until on the 12th of April, 1866, the sum of legal tenders was brought down to $121,907,103."

Mr. Blaine then tells of the development of opposition to this policy by those who had incurred pecuniary obligations in the expanded currency, and felt that the contraction was requiring them to settle in a dearer form of money. This opposition led to protracted debates over the measure aimed at Secretary McCulloch's policy. The bill was finally passed and the minimum of greenbacks was fixed at $356,000,000, where it has since remained.

Mr. Blaine's story of the administration of Mr. McCulloch makes interesting reading to Sentinel readers, now that the subject has been given a local setting.

CERO-FRUTO

"An All-Day Food"

Wheat and Pure Fruit Combined

Until within a few years very little attention was given to specially prepared foods of high nutritive values, their use being wanted except for invalids and confirmed dyspeptics. But a change, a great change, has taken place. The present great consumption of prepared, cooked and highly nutritious foods is abundant evidence that the public is educated up to the importance of the food question.

CERO-FRUTO contains the greatest amount of nutrition of any of the popular prepared foods. Its value as a food equals 100 per cent. It heads the list. The first step in the process of digestion is taken in its preparation, relieving the digestive apparatus from unnecessary labor in the performance of its proper function.

CERO-FRUTO is a pre-digested food. The starchy element is advanced in the preliminary stage and is converted into sugar. This process renders the assimilation easy and prompt, preventing undue fermentation, "heartburn," flatulency and other grave disorders. Each flake of the CERO-FRUTO represents the entire wheat grain, which includes the rich phosphatic elements necessary for maintaining the proper condition of blood, brain, bone and muscle. The fruity portion of CERO-FRUTO possesses luscious grape sugar—the most perfect sugar in state of complete digestion.

This combination of the grain and fruit makes CERO-FRUTO one of the most wholesome of the foods. Sold by all grocers.

THE TALMAGE SERMON.

(Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D. D., of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago, in the Christian Herald).

In this sermon Rev. Talmage takes for his theme "The Far Country," and finds his text in Luke xv., 13: "The younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country."

The old homestead is turned upside down. One of the two boys, the younger, is about to leave the parental roof. The eaglet is tired of being warmed by the protecting breasts of the old birds. With ruffled feathers he stands upon the edge of the eyrie ready to fly off. Sad is the disruption of a home. When the children say "Good-by," the families talk and laugh and joke. But they are only laughing to sustain their courage. The wedding bells weep as well as sing. At the marriage, the guests may congratulate the parents of the bride upon having gained a son. But the daughter is never the same after the wedding. On that day, the bride goes forth to make her own home, build her own nest, rear her own young, and live her own life. Instead of belonging to the parent, she becomes another's. Instead of the mother being first, now she is second.

Some years ago, I attended the wedding of a very dear friend. The slipper had been thrown. The rice tossed. The farewells shouted. I followed the old gray-haired father down to the garden gate. While we stood there, in the moonlight, he turned to me and said, "Frank, I know she has married a good man. I do hope she will be happy. But it is hard, awfully hard, to give her up. She was my baby girl. She is my youngest. It breaks the heart! It breaks the heart!" Children are born. They pass boyhood and girlhood days under the parental roof. They grow up into manhood and womanhood. They begin to scatter. Death knocks at the front door and summons some. Love hovers among the spring flowers and breathes through the orange blossoms and woos others. Business and professional duties beckon to others. At last the old nursery is vacant. Father and mother sit again alone at the dining-table as they once did when they themselves were bride and groom. The old homestead is deserted save by the old folks. The text is a tragedy.

LEAVING HOME.

The mother did not sleep much last night. Though she tries to look cheerful her eyes are red from weeping. Every little while she disappears into the pantry or goes upstairs. She makes an excuse as though she was looking for something. We know she leaves the room for one purpose. She wants to have a good cry.

The father is giving his last instructions. He is handing the young traveler some letters of introduction to a prominent merchant with whom the son will lodge in the next town. A noise at the gate. Servants are bringing out the horses and strapping the baggage upon the pack mules. They talk in subdued whispers. Even they feel sorry. The young "master" was a happy, jolly-go-lucky boy. He always had a kind word for the hostlers. The only happy creature this morning is the dog. He frisks and barks about, expecting to follow the sportsmen for a week's hunt. His hilarity is stopped. Some one flies a stone at the brute, and shouts, "Go back to the barn." Slowly the dog turns. His lowered head and tail are the canine signs of abject woe. He stops now and then, expecting to hear the familiar huntsman's halloo. Perhaps he realizes for the first time he is taking a last look of farewell. I always did think that a bright dog was smarter than a stupid man.

The farewell words are now being said. The father gives his benediction. We must turn our heads away. The mother is having her last convulsive clasp. These are the snapping of the heart-strings. A mother rarely realizes that the baby she once rocked in a cradle can grow into a man. He is always her boy. Suddenly the young man breaks away. He leaps into the saddle. The spurs cut deep. Parents and friends shout their farewell to the cavalcade. Then they wave and throw kisses. The old father wipes his face vigorously with a handkerchief. He scolds the servants. He bids them to be off. He does not want them to see him cry. The mother has no such pride. As the horses disappear over the last hill the aged wife buries her head upon her husband's breast. She sobs as though her heart would break. The husband tenderly puts his arm about the sad heart. He draws her towards the house.

Slowly they walk up the tree-arched path. They stop a moment on the porch to glance down the road. Slowly the sighing father opens the front door. Tie men go back to the fields. The female servants to the kitchen. The domestic machinery is started. The neighbors, returning to their homes, say, "Is it not too bad that the younger son should gather all together, and take his journey into a far country."

The far country of my text is the land of sin. Where it is we do not geographically know. The far country may be in the rural regions, among the farm houses. People make a very great mistake in supposing that the only place in which sin thrives is a large city. Sin loves to smell the wild flowers and lie down in the haymow, as well as to tramp the streets of a busy metropolis. I have preached in the country, and know of what I speak. There is loathsome drunkenness in a cross-road tavern as well as in a corner saloon. Many a young country girl has disgraced the family. Farmers' boys and girls do not all attend the country revivals in order to hear the preaching. The far country of sin can be located in the city. Sin is not proportionally more prevalent in the city than in the village. But it is better able to conceal its tracks in a wilderness of rock than in a country town. Many a letter have I received which went thus: "I am a farmer's wife. I have a boy in the great, wicked city of Chicago. I fear he is not doing right. You may be able to save him. He has written me that he has attended your church. Will you pray for him?" The far country of sin is sometimes found among the evils of political life, in the legislative halls of the state and the national capital. Sometimes sin is intrenched in a pulpit of the land where a minister has become an apostate, and Judas-like, has sold his Christ for thirty pieces of silver. Wherever the far country of sin may be, there is the place where the nobler, and purer and better parts of a man's life are being strangled.

A FLOATING GRAVE YARD.

Once a sailing vessel was sighted floating among the icebergs of the Arctics. The captain of the approaching vessel put the trumpet to his lips, and shouted, "Ship ahoy! Whither bound? Whither bound?" No answer. Again the trumpet called, but the only sound heard by the captain was the echo of his own voice. A small boat was lowered. When the derelict was boarded, it was found to be the ship of death. That floating ship carried a dead crew. The wheelman had been frozen dead in the pilot house. The captain frozen to death in his cabin. The sailors frozen to death in their bunks. The derelict had been drifting around for thirteen long years with its crew unable to raise a hand, utter a sound or furl a sail.

The far country is the land of sin, where the inhabitants are dead to God. They are dead in their desire to make out of themselves what Christ would have them do. They are dead to spiritual love. They are so dead, that they will not hear the divine Father's voice calling them back to the heavenly homestead.

Though the far country of sin may be anywhere, yet it is always a great distance away from the fireside of a Christian home. As soon as the younger son determined to revel in sin, he wanted to get away from the presence of his aged Christian father. He practically said: "Father, give me the share of money which will come to me when you are dead, and I will leave home and live independently. I do not want to see your loving eyes and feel the kiss of holy affection upon my lips. I want to go with evil companions, and not associate with you, even though you are my father." The Christian home ought to be the happiest place on earth to a child. It is a happy place if the child wishes and tries to do right. But the Christian home is a repulsive place to live when the boy wants to do those things which should be left undone. When a boy or a girl does not wish to stay home at night with the rest of the family, or finds other companionship more desirable than that of mother or father, look out—beware!

DECEIVING A MOTHER.

"Where are you going, Charlie?" said a mother to her son, who was putting on his coat and hat, preparing to leave the house. "Oh," answered the young man, "the firm wants me to collect a few bills. I will be home early, mother. Do not be anxious or sit up for me if I am detained." The young man passed down the street. He sounded a low whistle. A couple of other young men met him at the corner. "Boys," he said, "mother is becoming suspicious. She did not want me to leave home. I must be more careful. Come, let's have some fun!" That night, in a place of evil resort this group of young men gambled and smoked and sang their lewd songs. It was great sport! They did not cease their carousal until the morning sun announced to the night watchman that his work was done and it was time for him to go to bed.

A few years later, in an eastern city, in a noted murder case, the jury brought in the verdict of murder in the first degree. When the judge asked the defendant why sentence should not be passed upon him, a young man arose. He turned a pale face toward the judge. As he began to speak, we see he was the same young man of whom I have just spoken. "Your honor," said he, "I am not afraid to die. If I committed murder in that drunken row a few months ago, I should be put to death. But, sir, before sentence is passed upon me, I should like to speak a word to the young men crowding this court room. I would like to tell them that I started on the road which led me to the gallows when I used to leave my home at night to go out with evil companions. When I went out thus I always, directly or indirectly, had to deceive my mother." The far country sin may seem to be only a step to the corner saloon. It is as far away as if it was ten thousand million miles away from the fireside of a Christian home.

The far country of sin generally has a broader and smoother highway for the younger members of the family than for the older sons and daughters. Easy is it for everyone to go to destruction unless sustained by the grace of God. The old as well as the young can have a satanic guide lead them into the valley of death if they are willing to be led. But it is especially easy for the younger members of a family to fling themselves over the precipice of eternal death. When the older children were young, in all probability the father was having hard work to make financial ends meet. He had to work day and night and night and day. He economized wherever possible. But after awhile the father got a foothold in a business or a professional career. Then the money commenced to flow into the family treasury. Then servants were able to be hired to do the work of the mother and sisters. Then the younger son was able to have his spending money and drive a horse and go with the young scions of the wealthier families. Then it was easy for him to buy a through ticket and go by the fast express to the far country of sin.

Mr. Moody well said, "This father of the parable ought to be censured. We cannot help but blame him. When the son said, 'Father, divide and give me my portion,' the father should have said, 'You show a bad spirit. I will make you go without your share.' That father could not have done a greater unkindness to the boy than to give him his goods and money and let him go. A true father would have said to such a contemptible filial spirit, 'Go, and earn your portion by the sweat of your own brow.'"

Parents, your very kindnesses and self-sacrifices may be the cause of your younger children's destruction. You have no right to give your younger son plenty of money and liberty to do wrong. It is your business to know how your children spend their money. It is your duty to know where your younger son passes his nights.

THE DOWNWARD PATH.

The far country is the place where the younger son spent his all. We can readily picture this young man when he first left home. He had plenty of money. The tavern keepers bowed and smiled at his approach. They regretted when his party left. The gay young folks of the region to which he went felt proud to be seen in public by his side. His bachelor apartments were furnished in the most expensive style. The banks would honor any drafts he made upon them. He was a hale fellow well met. He was as much intoxicated with flattery as with wine. The gold which he held in his opened hand was just as yellow and hard as if he was living on his interest instead of on the principal. His health was robust and strong. He had not yet undermined his physical constitution by excesses. But now the rosy cheek pales. The steady nerve trembles. The mortgage is placed upon the fine furniture. He sells some of his diamonds. After awhile he begins to run up bills. Not being able to pay his bills as of yore, the creditors become anxious and demand payment, and full payment at once. What happens? Why, the story of the prodigal son then tells us that there was a famine in that land. As soon as a sinner's money is gone his sinful friends immediately leave him. The bright-winged humming birds have little use for the rose bush when the flowers are gone. This younger son began to be in want. He became helpless and friendless. To earn food enough to sustain life he tended a herd of swine. This social condition was the worst to which a Jew could ever sink.

A SERMON REALIZED.

An aristocratic lady living in London had a very dissipated son. A friend said: "Why not take your son to hear Rowland Hill preach? Perhaps he can save him." The mother answered, "I will." Next Sunday night she sat in Mr. Hill's audience to listen to the greatest preacher of his day. Rowland Hill arose, gave out a text and began a sermon upon the prodigal son in this way: "The other day I saw a farmer coaxing some swine to a slaughter house. The farmer had a bag of corn in his hand. Every few steps the man would drop a few grains. The swine would run after him and greedily devour them. Poor fools, said I, those swine do not know the farmer is leading them into a slaughter house, where they are to be killed." After the benediction this aristocratic lady turned to her son and said: "Was not that illustration about the swine awful? Think of a minister's using such a figure in the Christian pulpit." "Mother," answered the young man, "I do not know whether Mr. Hill had a right to use that illustration or not in a church. I do know what Mr. Hill meant. He meant that I was the prodigal son being led by Satan into the far country of sin, where I would be destroyed as swine are killed by the butcher's knife in a slaughter house."

The far country is never so far away but that the penitent prodigal can find his way back from it to the heavenly homestead. When the younger son became so poor that he had no decent clothes for his back; so friendless that not one of his old companions would speak to him, when he would feign have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat, then he thought of his father's past love. "Surely," said he, "father will give me enough to eat. He will care for me as much as he would for one of his hired servants, even though I have done wrong." But the good father was ready to do more than that. No sooner did the younger son come within sight of the old homestead than the father ran to meet him. He fell on his son's neck, and kissed him. He kissed him in the same manner the Divine Father is ready to greet every one of his wayward children. He gave a loving kiss of eternal pardon. He kissed him, as God will kiss us if we will only come back to Jesus' side, and stand under the shadow of the atoning cross.

One moonlight night at Asbury Park a party of young people were gathered on the beach. As the waves came rolling up the sands the conversation dragged. Then a young girl, with a voice as sweet as a bird's, began to sing. Her many friends joined in and made a large chorus. After awhile this young girl started the tender home melody of Robert Laurie:

Oh, could I see you now, my boy,
As fair as in olden time,
When prattle and smile made home a joy
And life was a merry chime.

When the last notes of this song died away an old man came towards the group and said to the young people, "Will you please sing that song again? My wife and I have a wayward son. We do not know where he is tonight. He ran away from home. We do want him to come back before we die." God, the Divine Father, is waiting. He is waiting for some of his wayward children to come tonight to the Gospel fireside.

Boy, sitting before me tonight, I have a message for you. I see the marks of dissipation upon your brow. I see that you have been crying during this sermon. I fear you are the younger son of my text. As I catch one of your falling tears I would like to describe a vision which came to me last winter about you. Where was the scene? No, it was not in Chicago. Not in that low saloon or cheap theater, or in that hall where you spent last night, playing billiards and gambling away your soul. The scene was way back in the country. You remember the old farm, the white house, the pillared porch. The big barn in the rear. The woodpile to the left of the kitchen door. The hens were running around clamoring for food because the earth was a frozen tomb. The worms had gone to sleep for their winter nap. It was about evening. An old, gray-haired woman was cooking over the kitchen stove. She looked thinner than when you saw her last. The neighbors say she is aging very rapidly and will not live long. Just then an old man came. He stamped the snow off his great boots. This gray-haired woman looked up and said, "Pa, have you brought a letter? Have you been to the post office. Is it not strange he has not written? He has been gone now five long years. Do you think God will let me live long enough to see him just once before I go?" The old man said nothing. He went to the door and looked down the road. He shaded his eyes as though he could "see a great way off." Then he said: "Mother, that is a fine calf we have there in the barnyard. She is getting fatter each day. We must kill her soon. Perhaps we can have a big feast when our boy comes home." They sat by the fire a little while after the dishes were wiped. The old folks were too tired to stay up late. They were too tired to sleep.

They took down the old Bible. The mother said, "Pa, won't you read that story of the prodigal son? Somehow I never can hear it enough. You read it last night. It is in the 15th chapter of Luke. Read about the younger son that went away and starved, and was too proud to come home." Then the old folks knelt. As they prayed, the little candle-light began to flash in sympathy. The tears trickled through the four withered hands. There the two tired, heartsick parents staid upon their knees, pleading with God for the return of their wayward boy, until an angel in heaven could bear their grief no longer. He fluttered away and whispered to me the secret that I am now telling. My son, will you not go home? Before the old folks are dead, do go home. Leave this far country of sin.

arms dropped to his sides; his face had a look of fear, of horror.

There, before him, in his riding cloak and tights, with his whip in his hand as he had come from his ride, stood Mr. Craig. His face was pallid, and his dark eyes were blazing with fierce light. As Nixon stopped, Craig stepped forward to him, and, sweeping his eyes round upon the circle, he said in tones intense with scorn:

"You cowards! You get a man where he's weak! Cowards! You'd damn his soul for his money!"

There was a dead silence, and Craig, lifting his hat, said solemnly:

"May God forgive you this night's work!"

Then, turning to Nixon and throwing his arm over his shoulder, he said in a voice broken and husky:

"Come on, Nixon! We'll go!"

Idaho made a motion as if to stop him, but Graeme stepped quickly forward and said sharply, "Make way there, can't you?" and the crowd fell back, and we four passed through, Nixon walking as in a dream, with Craig's arm about him. Down the street we went in silence and on to Craig's shack, where we found old mad Nelson, with the fire blazing and strong coffee steaming on the stove. It was he that had told Craig, on his arrival from the Landing, of Nixon's fall.

There was nothing of reproach, but only gentlest pity, in tone and touch as Craig placed the half drunk, dazed man in his easy chair, took off his boots, brought him his own slippers and gave him coffee. Then, as his stupor began to overcome him, Craig put him in his own bed and came forth with a face written over with grief.

"Don't mind, old chap," said Graeme kindly.

But Craig looked at him without a word and, throwing himself into a chair, put his face in his hands. As we sat there in silence the door was suddenly pushed open, and in walked Abe Baker, with the words, "Where is Nixon?" and we told him where he was. We were still talking when again a tap came to the door, and Shaw came in looking much disturbed.

"Did you hear about Nixon?" he asked. We told him what we knew.

"But did you hear how they got him?" he asked excitedly.

As he told us the tale the men stood listening, with faces growing hard.

It appeared that after the making of the league the Black Rock hotel man had bet Idaho a hundred to fifty that Nixon could not be got to drink before Easter. All Idaho's schemes had failed, and now he had only three days in which to win his money, and the ball was his last chance. Here, again, he was baffled, for Nixon, resisting all entreaties, barred his shack door and went to bed before nightfall, according to his invariable custom on pay days. At midnight some of Idaho's men came battering at the door for admission, which Nixon reluctantly granted. For half an hour they used every art of persuasion to induce him to go down to the ball, the glorious success of which was glowingly depicted, but Nixon remained immovable, and they took their departure, baffled and cursing. In two hours they returned drunk enough to be dangerous, kicked at the door in vain, finally gained entrance through the window, hauled Nixon out of bed and, holding a glass of whisky to his lips, bid him drink, but he knocked the glass away, spilling the liquor over himself and the bed.

It was drink or fight, and Nixon was ready to fight, but after a parley they had a drink all round and fell to persuasion again. The night was cold, and poor Nixon sat shivering on the edge of his bed. If he would take one drink, they would leave him alone. He need not show himself so stiff. The whisky fumes filled his nostrils. If one drink would get them off, surely that was better than fighting and killing some one or getting killed. He hesitated, yielded, drank his glass. They sat about him amiably drinking and lauding him as a fine fellow after all. One more glass before they left; then Nixon rose, dressed himself, drank all that was left of the bottle, put his money in his pocket and came down to the dance wild with his old time madness, reckless of faith and pledge, forgetful of home, wife, babies, his whole being absorbed in one great passion—to drink and drink and drink till he could drink no more.

Before Shaw had finished his tale Craig's eyes were streaming with tears, and groans of rage and pity broke alternately from him.

Abe remained speechless for a time, not trusting himself, but as he heard Craig groan, "Oh, the beasts, the fiends!" he seemed encouraged to let himself loose, and he began swearing with the coolest and most bloodcurdling deliberation.

Craig listened with evident approval, apparently finding complete satisfaction in Abe's performance, when suddenly he seemed to waken up, caught Abe by the arm and said in a horror stricken voice:

"Stop! Stop! God forgive us! We must not swear like this."

Abe stopped at once and in a surprised and slightly grieved voice said:

"Why, what's the matter with that? Didn't that what you wanted?"

"Yes, yes. God forgive me! I am afraid it was," he answered hurriedly, "but I must not."

"Oh, don't you worry;" went on Abe cheerfully. "I'll look after that part, and anyway ain't they the blankest blankety blank"— going off again into a roll of curses till Craig, in an agony of entreaty, succeeded in arresting the flow of profanity possible to no one but a mountain stage driver. Abe paused, looking hurt, and asked if they did not deserve everything he was calling down upon them.

"Yes, yes," urged Craig, "but that is not our business."

"Well, so I reckoned," replied Abe, recognizing the limitations of the cloth. "You ain't used to it, and you can't be expected to do it, but it just makes me feel good—let out of school like—to properly do 'em up, the blank, blank"— And off he went again. It was only under the pressure of Mr. Craig's prayers and commands that he finally agreed to "hold in, though it's tough."

"What's to be done?" asked Shaw.

"Nothing," answered Craig bitterly.

He was exhausted with his long ride from the Landing and broken with bitter disappointment over the ruin of all that he had labored so long to accomplish.

"Nonsense!" said Graeme. "There's a good deal to do."

It was agreed that Craig should remain with Nixon, while the others of us should gather up what fragments we could find of the broken league. We had just opened the door when we met a man striding up at a great pace. It was Geordie Crawford.

"Hae ye seen the lad?" was his salutation.

No one replied, so I told Geordie of my last sight of Billy in the orchestra.

"An' did ye no' gang after him?" he asked in indignant surprise, adding, with some contempt, "Man, but ye're a feckless bodkie!"

"Billy gone, too?" said Shaw. "They might have let Billy alone.

Poor Craig stood in dumb agony. Billy's fall seemed more than he could bear. We went out, leaving him heart-broken amid the ruins of his league.

CHAPTER IX.

THE LEAGUE'S REVENGE.

As we stood outside of Craig's shack in the dim starlight we could not hide from ourselves that we were beaten. It was not so much grief as a blind fury that filled my heart, and, looking at the faces of the men about me, I read the same feeling there. But what could we do? The yells of carousing miners down at Slavin's told us that nothing could be done with them that night. To be so utterly beaten and unfairly and with no chance of revenge was maddening.

"I'd like to get back at 'em," said Abe, carefully repressing himself.

"I've got it, men," said Graeme suddenly. "This town does not require all the whisky there is in it." And he unfolded his plan. It was to gain possession of Slavin's saloon and the bar of the Black Rock hotel and clear out all the liquor to be found in both these places. I did not much like the idea, but Geordie said: "I'm ga'en after the lad. I'll hae naethin' tae dae wi' yon. It's no that easy, an' it's a sinfu' waste."

But Abe was wild to try it, and Shaw was quite willing, while old Nelson sternly approved.

"Nelson, you and Shaw get a couple of our men and attend to the saloon. Slavin and the whole gang are up at the Black Rock, so you won't have much trouble, but come to us as soon as you can."

And so we went our ways.

Then followed a scene the like of which I can never hope to see again, and it was worth a man's seeing, but there were times that night when I wished I had not agreed to follow Graeme in his plot.

As we went up to the hotel I asked Graeme:

"What about the law of this?"

"Law!" he replied indignantly. "They haven't troubled much about law in the whisky business here. They get a keg of high wines and some drugs and begin operations. No," he went on; "if we can get the crowd out and ourselves in we'll make them break the law in getting us out. The law won't trouble us over smuggled whisky. It will be a great lark, and they won't crow too loud over the league."

I did not like the undertaking at first, but as I thought of the whole wretched illegal business flourishing upon the weakness of the men in the mines and camps, whom I had learned to regard as brothers, and especially as I thought of the cowards that did for Nixon, I let my scruples go and determined, with Abe, to "get back at 'em."

We had no difficulty getting them out. Abe began to yell. Some men rushed out to learn the cause. He seized the foremost man, making a hideous uproar all the while, and in three minutes had every man out of the hotel and a lively row going on.

In two minutes more Graeme and I had the door of the ballroom locked and barricaded with empty casks. We then closed the door of the barroom leading to the outside. The barroom was a strongly built log shack, with a heavy door secured, after the manner of the early cabins, with two strong oak bars, so that we felt safe from attack from that quarter.

The ballroom we could not hold long, for the door was slight and entrance was possible through the window. But as only a few casks of liquor were left there our main work would be in the bar, so that the fight would be to hold the passageway. This we barricaded with casks and tables. But by this time the crowd had begun to realize what had happened and were wildly yelling at door and windows. With an ax which Graeme had brought with him the casks were soon stove in and left to empty themselves.

As I was about to empty the last cask Graeme stopped me, saying: "Let that stand here. It will help us." And so it did. "Now skip for the barricade!" yelled Graeme as a man came crashing through the window. But before he could regain his feet Graeme had seized him and flung him out upon the heads of the crowd outside. But through the other windows men were coming in, and Graeme rushed for the barricade, followed by two of the enemy, the foremost of whom I received at the top and hurled back upon the others.

"Now be quick!" said Graeme. "I'll hold this. Don't break any bottles or the floor. Throw them out there," pointing to a little window high up in the wall.

I made all haste. The casks did not take much time, and soon the whisky and beer were flowing over the floor. It made me think of Geordie's regret over the "sinfu' waste." The bottles took longer, and, glancing up now and then, I saw that Graeme was being hard pressed. Men would leap, two and three at a time, upon the barricade, and Graeme's arms would shoot out, and over they would topple upon the heads of those nearest. It was a great sight to see him standing alone, with a smile on his face and the light of battle in his eye, coolly meeting his assailants with those terrific, lightning-like blows. In fifteen minutes my work was done.

"What next?" I asked. "How do we get out?"

"How is the door?" he replied.

I looked through the portholes and said:

"A crowd of men waiting."

"We'll have to make a dash for it, I fancy," he replied cheerfully, though his face was covered with blood and his breath was coming in short gasps.

"Get down the bars and be ready."

But even as he spoke a chair hurled from below caught him on the arm, and before he could recover a man had cleared the barricade and was upon him like a tiger. It was Idaho Jack.

"Hold the barricade!" Graeme called out as they both went down.

I sprang to his place, but I had not much hope of holding it long. I had the heavy oak bar of the door in my hands, and, swinging it round my head, I made the crowd give back for a few moments.

Meantime Graeme had shaken off his enemy, who was circling about him upon his tiptoes, with a long knife in his hand, waiting for a chance to spring.

"I have been waiting for this for some time, Mr. Graeme," he said, smiling.

"Yes," replied Graeme, "ever since I spoiled your cutthroat game in Frisco. How is the little one?" he added sarcastically.

Idaho's face lost its smile and became distorted with fury as he replied, spitting out his words:

"She is—where you will be before I am done with you."

"Ah, you murdered her too! You'll hang some beautiful day, Idaho," said Graeme as Idaho sprung upon him.

Graeme dodged his blow and caught his forearm with his left hand and held up high the murderous knife. Back and forward they swayed over the floor, slippery with whisky, the knife held high in the air. I wondered why Graeme did not strike, and then I saw his right hand hung limp from the wrist. The men were crowding upon the barricade. I was in despair. Graeme's strength was going fast. With a yell of exultant fury Idaho threw himself with all his weight upon Graeme, who could only cling to him. They swayed together toward me, but as they fell I brought down my bar upon the upraised hand and sent the knife flying across the room. Idaho's howl of rage and pain was mingled with a shout from below, and there, dashing the crowd to right and left, came old Nelson, followed by Abe, Sandy, Baptiste, Shaw and others. As they reached the barricade it crashed down and, carrying me with it, pinned me fast.

Looking out between the barrels, I saw what froze my heart with horror. In the fall Graeme had wound his arms about his enemy and held him in a grip so deadly that he could not strike, but Graeme's strength was failing, and when I looked I saw that Idaho was slowly dragging both across the slippery floor to where the knife lay. Nearer and nearer his outstretched fingers came to the knife. In vain I yelled and struggled. My voice was lost in the awful din, and the barricade held me fast. Above me, standing on a barrel head, was Baptiste, yelling like a demon. In vain I called to him. My fingers could just reach his foot, and he heeded not at all my touch. Slowly Idaho was dragging his almost unconscious victim toward the knife. His fingers were touching the blade point when, under a sudden inspiration, I pulled out my penknife, opened it with my teeth and drove the blade into Baptiste's foot. With a bloodcurdling yell he sprang down and began dancing round in his rage, peering among the barrels.

"Look! Look!" I was calling in agony and pointing. "For heaven's sake, look, Baptiste!"

The fingers had closed upon the knife, the knife was already high in the air, when, with a shriek, Baptiste cleared the room at a bound, and before the knife could fall the little Frenchman's foot had caught the uplifted wrist and sent the knife flying to the wall.

Then there was a great rushing sound as of wind through the forest, and the lights went out. When I awoke, I found myself lying with my head on Graeme's knees and Baptiste sprinkling snow on my face. As I looked up Graeme leaned over, and, smiling down into my eyes, he said:

"Good boy! It was a great fight, and we put it up well." And then he whispered, "I owe you my life, my boy."

His words thrilled my heart through and through, for I loved him as only men can love men, but I only answered:

"I could not keep them back."

"It was well done," he said, and I felt proud.

I confess I was thankful to be so well out of it, for Graeme got off with a bone in his wrist broken and I with a couple of ribs cracked, but had it not been for the open barrel of whisky which kept them occupied for a time, offering too good a chance to be lost, and for the timely arrival of Nelson, neither of us had ever seen the light again.

We found Craig sound asleep upon his couch. His consternation on waking to see us torn, bruised and bloody was laughable, but he hastened to find us warm water and bandages, and we soon felt comfortable.

Baptiste was radiant with pride and delight over the fight and hovered about Graeme and me, giving vent to his feelings in admiring French and English expletives. But Abe was disgusted because of the failure at Slavin's, for when Nelson looked in he saw Slavin's French Canadian wife in charge, with her baby on her lap, and he came back to Shaw and said, "Come away; we can't touch this," and Shaw, after looking in, agreed that nothing could be done. A baby held the fort.

As Craig listened to the account of the fight he tried hard not to approve, but he could not keep the gleam out of his eyes, and as I pictured Graeme dashing back the crowd thronging the barricade till he was brought down by the chair Craig laughed gently and put his hand on Graeme's knee, and as I went on to describe my agony while Idaho's fingers were gradually nearing the knife his face grew pale and his eyes grew wide with horror.

"Baptiste here did the business," I said, and the little Frenchman nodded complacently and said:

"That's me for sure."

"By the way, how is your foot?" asked Graeme.

"He's fuss rate. Dat's what you call—one bite of of—dat lest bees. He's dere; you put your finger dere, he's not dere. What you call him?"

"Flea," I suggested.

"Oui!" cried Baptiste. "Dat's one bite of flea."

"I was thankful I was under the barrels," I replied, smiling.

"Oui! Dat's mak me ver mad. I jump and swear mos awful bad. Dat's pardon me, M'sieu Craig, heh?"

But Craig only smiled at him rather sadly.

"It was awfully risky," he said to Graeme, "and it was hardly worth it. They'll get more whisky, and anyway the league is gone."

"Well," said Graeme, with a sigh of satisfaction, "it is not quite such a one sided affair as it was."

And we could say nothing in reply, for we could hear Nixon snoring in the next room, and no one had heard of Billy, and there were others of the league that we knew were even now down at Slavin's. It was thought best that all should remain in Mr. Craig's shack, not knowing what might happen, and so we lay where we could, and we needed none to sing us to sleep.

When I awoke, stiff and sore, it was to find breakfast ready and old man Nelson in charge. As we were seated Craig came in, and I saw that he was not the man of the night before. His courage had come back; his face was quiet and his eye clear. He was his own man again.

"Geordie has been out all night, but has failed to find Billy," he announced quietly.

We did not talk much. Graeme and I worried with our broken bones, and the others suffered from a general morning depression. But after breakfast, as the men were beginning to move, Craig took down his Bible, and, saying, "Wait a few minutes, men," he read slowly, in his beautiful, clear voice, that psalm for all fighters,

"God is our refuge and strength," and so on to the noble words:

"The Lord of Hosts is with us;
The God of Jacob is our refuge."

How the mighty words pulled us together, lifted us till we grew ashamed of our ignoble rage and of our ignoble depression!

And then Craig prayed in simple, straightgoing words. There was no acknowledgment of failure, but I knew he was thinking chiefly of himself; there was gratitude, and that was for the men about him, and I felt my face burn with shame; there was a petition for help, and we all thought of Nixon and Billy and the men wakening from their debauch at Slavin's this pure, bright morning. Then he asked that we might be made faithful and worthy of God, whose battle it was. Then we all stood up and shook hands with him in silence, and every man knew a covenant was being made. But none saw his meeting with Nixon. He sent us all away before that.

Nothing was heard of the destruction of the hotel stock in trade. Unpleasant questions would certainly be asked, and the proprietor decided to let bad alone. On the point of respectability the success of the ball was not conspicuous, but the antileague men were content if not jubilant.

Billy Breen was found by Geordie late in the afternoon in his own old and deserted shack, breathing heavily, covered up in his filthy, moldering bedclothes, with a half empty bottle of whisky at his side. Geordie's grief and rage were beyond even his Scotch control. He spoke few words, but these were of such concentrated vehemence that no one felt the need of Abe's assistance in vocabulary.

Poor Billy! We carried him to Mrs. Mayor's home, put him in a warm bath, rolled him in blankets and gave him little sips of hot water, then of hot milk and coffee, as I had seen a clever doctor in the hospital treat a similar case of nerve and heart depression. But the already weakened system could not recover from the awful shock of the exposure following the debauch, and on Sunday afternoon we saw that his heart was failing fast. All day the miners had been dropping in to inquire after him, for Billy had been a great favorite in other days, and the attention of the town had been admiringly centered upon his fight of these last weeks. It was with no ordinary sorrow that the news of his condition was received. As Mrs. Mayor sang to him his large, coarse hands moved in time to the music, but he did not open his eyes till he heard Mr. Craig's voice in the next room. Then he spoke his name, and Mr. Craig was kneeling beside him in a moment. The words came slowly:

"Oi tried—to fight hit hout—but—Oi got beaten. Hit 'urts to think 'e's ashamed o' me. Oi'd like t'a done better—Oi would."

"Ashamed of you, Billy?" said Craig in a voice that broke. "Not he."

"And—ye hall—'elped me so?" he went on. "Oi wish Oi'd 'a' done better—Oi do." And his eyes sought Geordie and then rested on Mrs. Mayor, who smiled back at him with a world of love in her eyes. "You hain't hashamed o' me—yore heyes saigh so," he said, looking at her.

"No, Billy," she said, and I wondered at her steady voice, "not a bit. Why, Billy, I am proud of you."

He gazed up at her with wonder and ineffable love in his little eyes, then lifted his hand slightly toward her. She knelt quickly and took it in both of hers, stroking it and kissing it.

"Oi haught t'a done better. Oi'm hawful sorry Oi went back on 'im. Hit was the lemonaide. The boys didn't mean no 'arm, but hit started the 'ell hinside."

Geordie hurled out some bitter words.

"Don't be 'ard on 'em, Geordie. They didn't mean no 'arm," he said, and his eyes kept waiting till Geordie said hurriedly:

"Na, na, lad! I'll juist leave them till the Almichty."

Then Mrs. Mayor sang softly, smoothing his hand, "Just as I Am," and Billy dozed quietly for half an hour.

When he awoke again, his eyes turned to Mr. Craig, and they were troubled and anxious.

"Oi tried 'ard. Oi wanted to win," he struggled to say.

By this time Craig was master of himself, and he answered in a clear, distinct voice:

"Listen, Billy. You made a great fight, and you are going to win yet. And, besides, do you remember the sheep that got lost over the mountains?" This parable was Billy's special delight. "He didn't beat it when he got it, did he? He took it in his arms and carried it home, and so he will you."

And Billy, keeping his eyes fastened on Mr. Craig, simply said:

"Will 'e?"

"Sure!" said Craig.

"Will 'e?" he repeated, turning his eyes upon Mrs. Mayor.

"Why, yes, Billy," she answered cheerily, though the tears were streaming from her eyes. "I would, and he loves you far more."

He looked at her, smiled and closed his eyes. I put my hand on his heart. It was fluttering feebly. Again a troubled look passed over his face.

"My—poor—hold—mother!" he whispered. "She's—hin—the—wukus."

"I shall take care of her, Billy," said Mrs. Mayor in a clear voice, and again Billy smiled. Then he turned his eyes to Mr. Craig and from him to Geordie and at last to Mrs. Mayor, where they rested. She bent over and kissed him twice on the forehead.

"Tell 'er," he said, with difficulty, "e's took me 'ome."

"Yes, Billy!" she cried, gazing into his glazing eyes.

He tried to lift her hand. She kissed him again. He drew one deep breath and lay quite still.

"Thank the Blessed Saviour!" said Mr. Craig reverently. "He has taken him home."

But Mrs. Mayor held the dead hand tight and sobbed out passionately:

"Oh, Billy, Billy, you helped me once when I needed help! I cannot forget!"

And Geordie, groaning, "Aye, laddie, laddie!" passed out into the fading light of the early evening.

Next day no one went to work, for to all it seemed a sacred day. They carried him into the little church, and there Mr. Craig spoke of his long, hard fight and of his final victory, for he died without a fear and with love to the men who, not knowing, had been his death. And there was no bitterness in any heart, for Mr. Craig read the story of the sheep and told how gently he had taken Billy home; but, though no word was spoken, it was there the league was made again.

They laid him under the pines beside Lewis Mayor, and the miners threw sprigs of evergreen into the open grave. When Slavin, sobbing bitterly, brought his sprig, no one stopped him, though all thought it strange.

As we turned to leave the grave the light from the evening sun came softly through the gap in the mountains and, filling the valley, touched the trees and the little mound beneath with glory, and I thought of that other glory which is brighter than the sun and was not sorry that poor Billy's weary fight was over, and I could not help agreeing with Craig that it was there the league had its revenge.

CHAPTER X.

WHAT CAME TO SLAVIN.

Billy Breen's legacy to the Black Rock mining camp was a new league, which was more than the old league remade. The league was new in its spirit and in its methods. The impression made upon the camp by Billy Breen's death was very remarkable, and I have never been quite able to account for it. The mood of the community at the time was peculiarly susceptible. Billy was one of the oldest of the old timers. His decline and fall had been a long process, and his struggle for life and manhood was striking enough to arrest the attention and awaken the sympathy of the whole camp. We instinctively side with a man in his struggle for freedom, for we feel that freedom is native to him and to us. The sudden collapse of the struggle stirred the men with a deep pity for the beaten man and a deep contempt for those who had tricked him to his doom; but, though the pity and the contempt remained, the gloom was relieved and the sense of defeat removed from the men's minds by the transforming glory of Billy's last hour. Mr. Craig, reading of the tragedy of Billy's death, transfigured defeat into victory, and this was gradually accepted by the men as the true reading, though to them it was full of mystery. But they could all understand and appreciate at full value the spirit that breathed through the words of the dying man: "Don't be 'ard on 'em. They didn't mean no 'arm." And this was the new spirit of the league.

It was this spirit that surprised Slavin into sudden tears at the grave's side. He had come braced for curses and vengeance, for all knew it was he who had doctored Billy's lemonade, and instead of vengeance the message from the dead that echoed through the voice of the living was one of pity and forgiveness.

But the days of the league's negative, defensive warfare were over. The fight was to the death, and now the war was to be carried into the enemy's country. The league men proposed a thoroughly equipped and well conducted coffee room, reading room and hall to parallel the enemy's lines of operation and defeat them with their own weapons upon their own ground. The main outlines of the scheme were clearly defined and were easily seen, but the perfecting of the details called for all Craig's tact and good sense. When, for instance, Vernon Winton, who had charge of the entertainment department, came for Craig's opinion as to a minstrel troupe and private theatricals, Craig was prompt with his answer:

"Anything clean goes."

"A nigger show?" asked Winton.

"Depends upon the niggers," replied Craig, with a gravely comic look, shrewdly adding, "Ask Mrs. Mayor." And so the League Minstrel and Dramatic company became an established fact and proved, as Craig afterward told me, a great means of grace to the camp.

Shaw had charge of the social department, whose special care it was to see that the men were made welcome to the cozy, cheerful reading room, where they might chat, smoke, read, write or play games, according to fancy.

But Craig felt that the success or failure of the scheme would largely depend upon the character of the resident manager, who, while caring for reading room and hall, would control and operate the important department represented by the coffee room.

"At this point the whole business may come to grief," he said to Mrs. Mayor, without whose counsel nothing was done.

"Why come to grief?" she asked brightly.

"Because if we don't get the right man that's what will happen," he replied in a tone that spoke of anxious worry.

"But we shall get the right man, never fear." Her serene courage never faltered. "He will come to us."

Craig turned and gazed at her in frank admiration and said:

"If I only had your courage!"

"Courage!" she answered quickly. "It is not for you to say that." And at his answering look the red came into her cheek and the depths in her eyes glowed, and I marveled and wondered looking at Craig's cool face, whether his blood were running evenly through his veins. But his voice was quiet—a shade too quiet, I thought—as he gravely replied:

"I would often be a coward but for the shame of it."

And so the league waited for the man to come who was to be resident manager and make the new enterprise a success. And come he did, but the manner of his coming was so extraordinary that I have believed in the doctrine of a special providence ever since for, as Craig said, "If he had come straight from heaven, I could not have been more surprised."

While the league was thus waiting its interest centered upon Slavin, chiefly because he represented more than any other the forces of the enemy, and though Billy Breen stood between him and the vengeance of the angry men who would have made short work of him and his saloon, nothing could save him from himself, and after the funeral Slavin went to his bar and drank whisky as he had never drunk before. But the more he drank the fiercer and gloomier he became, and when the men drinking with him chaffed him he swore deeply and with such threats that they left him alone.

It did not help Slavin either to have Nixon stride in through the crowd drinking at his bar and give him words of warning.

"It is not your fault, Slavin," he said in a slow, cool voice, "that you and your precious crew didn't send me to my death too. You've won your bet but I want to say that next time though you are seven to one or ten times that, when any of you boys offer me a drink I'll take you to mean fight, and I'll not disappoint you, and some one will be killed." And, so saying, he strode out again, leaving a mean looking crowd of men behind him. All who had not been concerned in the business at Nixon's shack expressed approval of his position and hoped he would see it through.

But the impression of Nixon's words upon Slavin was as nothing compared with that made by Geordie Crawford. It was not what he said so much as the manner of awful solemnity he carried. Geordie was struggling conscientiously to keep his promise to "not be 'ard on the boys" and found considerable relief in remembering that he had agreed "to leave them tae the Almichty." But the manner of leaving them was so solemnly awful that I could not wonder that Slavin's superstitious Irish nature supplied him with supernatural terrors. It was the second day after the funeral that Geordie and I were walking toward Slavin's. There was a great shout of laughter as we drew near.

SHE TOOK HER PAPA HOME.

A Touching Story Which Forcibly Illustrates a Sad Phase of the Liquor Question.

The following story of a pathetic incident which occurred in Atlanta, Ga., is told by the Southern Star, a prohibition paper of that city. It is not an unusual incident at all, its counterpart has been witnessed in every large city where the open saloon tempts weak men to their ruin:

It was nine o'clock at night, bitterly cold, and the winds whistled around the police barracks in Atlanta. Hardly a person was on the street, it was so bleak and cold.

The officers at the barracks had gathered around the warm heater telling their experiences in the past when a little, gentle rap was heard on the door.

"Come in," cried the call officer.

There was silence for a moment and the rap was repeated again.

"For Heaven's sake, tell whoever it is to come in out of the cold," called the station sergeant.

Then an effort was made to open the door, but it failed, and then for the third time the tap on the door was repeated and the call man jumped up and opened the door.

Out in the cold, on the stone steps, stood a tiny little girl. She was thinly clad, although it was freezing outside. Her thin brown hair clung in damp threads about her pale forehead.

"Great God," exclaimed the officer, "come in, little girl, and get warm."

The child shuddered either from

"IS—IS PAPA HERE?"

fright or cold and slowly walked into the office.

"What do you want?" asked the astonished sergeant.

"Is—is—papa here?" said the child, her eyes filling with tears.

"Your papa?" said the sergeant, "who is your papa, and why do you think he is in such a place as this?"

Brushing away the tears, the child replied in a trembling voice: "Mamma said to-night that papa was sick and the police had him. So I came here to find him. Is he here?"

The little one then gave the name of her father and the sergeant found that he was docketed as being drunk. He called the turnkey and asked him to see if the man had sobered up.

The turnkey reported that the man was sober enough to go home.

"Then let him out," said the kind-hearted officer, "and give him a copy of charges. It's not business, but the little girl shall have her papa."

The man came out haggard and weak from the effects of his spree. The child ran with a glad cry into his arms and kissed him again and again.

"Mamma told me you were sick," she said, "and I have come to take you home."

The man made no reply. His hands trembled as he tried to smooth back his brown hair. In silence he passed from the barracks with his trusting, loving little girl.

"If that man doesn't reform and let this be his last drunk," remarked the station sergeant, "he is made of stone."

Yet a Christian nation, for a few dollars, will legalize a traffic that renders such sad cases possible.

LATEST DOINGS.

"Mida's Criterion," a leading liquor organ, says: "The bottom has dropped out of the liquor business in Bridgeton, N. J., and the 15 saloonkeepers who are paying a $1,000 license fee are much discouraged."

The supreme court of Iowa has affirmed the judgment of the lower courts against William Manderscheid, a saloonkeeper, of Sioux City, for $6,000, in favor of the wife of a man who was so badly frozen while under the influence of liquor as to lose his feet and hands.

A late report from Paris states that 8,000,000 bottles of absinthe were consumed in Paris last year. This appears to be an increase of over 1,000,000 bottles from the year before. The report is very emphatic in calling this one of the most ominous signs of peril to the future growth of the country. Evidently some very strong measures must be used or this increase will continue and extend even to this country.—Journal of Inebriety.

Teetotalers in Canada.

The Toronto Mail makes claim that "if the teetotalers were counted it would probably be found that in proportion to population they are more numerous in Canada than anywhere else in the civilized world.

Leaves Fortune to Temperance Cause

A Mr. Jerome Plummer, of Independence township, Pa., who recently died, left the most of his estate to create a fund to be known as the Jerome Plummer Temperance fund, to "promote, advance and develop the cause of temperance in Washington county, and to prevent licensing saloons therein." The fund amounts to about $17,000, and three trustees have been appointed to disburse it according to their best judgment, for the promotion of the cause of temperance.

CARE OF ALCOHOLISTS.

Prof. Shafer Lengerich, of Berlin, Germany, Favors the Plan of Public Asylums.

Prof. Shafer Lengerich, of Berlin, Germany, has lately in an interesting paper treated the question of public asylums for alcoholists. The different points he treats on are as follows:

1. Drunkenness, acute and chronic alcoholism are each a kind of insanity.

2. From a theoretical standpoint it is indifferent if alcoholists are treated in special asylums or in general insane asylums, but the first is the most practical way.

3. Public asylums for alcoholists are greatly needed.

4. Only graduated physicians ought to be in charge of such asylums.

5. Laws must be enacted by which alcoholists, under certain circumstances, can even against their wishes be sent to such asylums.

The author tries in a rather lengthy article to prove his thesis.

The Berlin Medical society, department of psychiatry, took up this paper for discussion. The doctors agreed that theoretically Prof. Shafer Lengerich was correct, but his ideas were entirely unpractical. The general asylums for insane are overcrowded before, so it would be out of the question to treat the great number of alcoholists there. Concerning special asylums, private ones where the patients went willingly and stayed a length of time may be of some benefit. But drunkenness and alcoholism are only temporary insanity, dependent on the possibility for the patients to get alcohol. In a public asylum the patient therefore must be discharged after a few weeks, maybe days, when he is considered cured, only to return in a short time for new treatment. As long as the state permits the sale of any alcoholic liquors of any kind whatsoever, says the Journal of Inebriety, such asylums would be of little or no benefit. The only practical plan is for the state to enact laws entirely prohibiting the sale of such liquors and to strictly enforce the laws.

OUR GREATEST CURSE.

Josiah Allen's Wife Tells What Alcohol Is Doing But Declares Right Will Triumph.

The saloon is the greatest curse of the present day, the fountainhead from whence flow streams of evil. It fills our prisons with criminals, our insane asylums with victims and our graveyards with paupers' graves. It turns happy homes into barren wastes. It debauches and ruins the husband, the son, the father; it destroys the happiness of the wife, the mother, the daughter. It clothes them in rags, starves them and breaks their hearts. And for what? That a few men may grow rich and flourish on the burnt ashes of homes. Every conscientious thinker admits that all I have said is only the sad truth. Then why allow this terrible cause of crime and wretchedness to go on? Why not inaugurate a war against it that would overthrow it? If every good man should vote as his better nature dictates this evil would be abolished. Do not say that it is hopeless to war against it, that this foe is too strongly intrenched in human hearts and selfishness, for right will triumph in the end.—Josiah Allen's Wife, in Woman's Home Companion.

A DOUBLE KNOCK.

Brutality of Drunken Husband Opens the Eyes of a Liquor Manufacturer.

"In knocking down his wife the man knocked me out of the liquor trade." In these words Mr. F. N. Charrington, so well known in connection with religious and temperance work in East London, closes his account of the way in which he was led to sever his connection with the head of the great brewing firm of Charrington, Head & Co., of which he was a partner. The man in question was drinking in a public house which Mr. Charrington happened to be passing. His wife just at that moment pushed open the door, and appealed to her husband for money to buy bread to feed her starving children. By way of answer her husband felled her to the ground. Mr. Charrington noticed that the sign-board bore the name of his firm. He reflected that this particular house probably furnished many such cases, and that the same was true of hundreds of other houses owned by the company. The responsibility was more than he could bear, and from that hour he resolved to give up his partnership, worth about £20,000 a year.

A Day of Reckoning Ahead.

The saloonkeeper may make money, but he heaps up a terrible reckoning. He scatters woe and destruction in his pathway. He creates moral blights and robs many a home of its precious treasures. He does not command either the respect or the love of the good and patriotic. His business may be tolerated, but it is not admired or sanctioned by those whose opinion counts the most in a community. The longer he continues in it, the greater and heavier the moral indictment against him and the more fearful the account he has to render.—Universalist Leader.

BOWSER'S BLUE POSY

GOES OUT AT NIGHT TO SEE A "CROCUS BREAK THE MOLD."

Moonlight Walk Is Halted by Bad Boys, Who Rudely Interrupt His Searching Argument Upon the Pronunciation of Xerxes.

[Copyright, 1902, by C. B. Lewis.]

THAT there was something on Mr. Bowser's mind as he came home to dinner the other evening Mrs. Bowser saw at a glance, but as he seemed puzzled rather than troubled she held her peace until he should be ready to explain. They had finished dinner, and he had almost smoked out his cigar as he read his paper, when he carelessly remarked:

"Mrs. Bowser, do you know that spring is here at last?"

"Why, yes, of course," she replied.

"It is early spring, but when I was a boy I used to go out into the fields

"WOMAN, I DON'T LIKE YOUR TONE!"

at this season and look for crocuses. The crocus is about the first spring flower, isn't it?"

"Yes; the crocus and dandelion."

Mr. Bowser hitched around uneasily and had no more to say for five minutes. Then he softly observed:

"The Romans had a queer superstition regarding the crocus, and there may have been something in it. I presume you have read of it?"

"I don't remember," she answered, looking at him in amazement that he should have been delving into Roman history or paying any more heed to crocuses than to brickbats.

"The superstition seems to have arisen with Xerxes, and it appears that he who went forth on a moonlight night and found a blue crocus was sure to be elevated to power and fame."

"But I thought you said it was a Roman superstition?"

"So I did, and so it was."

"But Xerxes was not a Roman."

"There you go! Always ready to call me a liar at the slightest excuse! If you'd look into history now and then instead of keeping to novels, you'd have more sense in your head. Maybe you think Xerxes was a Dutchman?"

"I know that he was a Persian," she quietly replied.

"Not by a jugful!"

She went over to the bookcase and took out a volume of the encyclopedia, and, turning to the proper letter, she laid the book down before Mr. Bowser that he might read:

"Xerxes I., king of Persia, was the eldest son of Darius and his second wife Atossa," etc.

"Yes, I see what it says," observed Mr. Bowser, "but does that make the slightest difference to me? When I said that Xerxes was a Roman, that settled it, and all the encyclopedias in the world couldn't change it. It is quite probable, however, that there were a dozen Xerxes hanging around at that time and that one of them may have been king of Persia."

"Yes, that may have been the way of it," said Mrs. Bowser, who saw a way to dodge the threatened row and was quick to take advantage of it. The family cat had figured on ragtime and gave her a reproachful glance as she crawfished.

"Whoever found a blue crocus on a moonlight night," repeated Mr. Bowser as he walked to and fro. "I suppose there are blue crocuses as well as other colors?"

"I never saw one."

"You never saw a whale, either, and yet whales exist. All the crocuses I have ever seen were yellow, but I never saw any except by daylight. Why shouldn't the light of the moon cast a blue shade over certain spring flowers?"

"I know of no reason why. Were you thinking of going out this evening to look for a blue crocus and become a Xerxes?"

"Woman, I don't like your tone!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he felt the sting of her words. "I can excuse your ignorance of ancient history, you being a woman, but I'll be hanged if you can indulge in sarcasm toward me! If it pleases me to go out and look for a blue crocus in order to confirm or explode a historic superstition, you can bet your life I shall go!"

The cat came out from under the lounge with new hopes in her heart, and Mrs. Bowser maintained a discreet silence. After pacing back and forth for awhile with what he hoped was a Xerxes stride Mr. Bowser advanced to a back window and drew aside the curtain. There was a bright moon, and he could see every beer bottle, tomato can and clothes-pin lying around the yard. There were pools of water and several soft spots, and it didn't look to be an inviting field for crocuses of any color. He might have given up the idea had not Mrs. Bowser suddenly asked:

"How do you pronounce the name Xerxes?"

"As it should be pronounced, of course," he replied.

"But how?"

"X-er-x-es. Have you any fault to find with that?"

"It is pronounced as if spelled 'Zerkzes.' You know there is a town in Ohio called Xenia. Nobody calls it 'X-enia,' but it is called 'Zenia.'"

Mr. Bowser turned to her with his face aflame and choked and gasped for a full minute before he could exclaim:

"Woman, this is too much—too much! Do you think my head is stuffed with sawdust? Did any husband ever bear of such cheek in a wife?"

"I was simply correcting you," she said in humble tones.

He glared at her and kicked out his legs to see if they were asleep, but the English language afforded him no words in which to reply. In this emergency he put on his hat and went out into the back yard to look for that blue crocus. He'd have gone if a whole army blocked the path. The cat went with him as far as the door and then halted. Mr. Bowser sent his gaze up and down and around, but he mistook not the yellow labels of the tomato cans nor the blue ones of the table sauce bottles for the spring flowers he sought. At length he wandered forth, stepping into a pool of water at the first stride, but totally ignoring it. He had reached the rear fence in his stroll and had mentally taken note of several weeds struggling for life under the cold moonlight when something whizzed by his head. Some boy in the neighborhood had observed his wanderings and decided to interrupt them with a potato. Where there is one boy there are two—three—six. Mr. Bowser had scarcely resumed his search for that blue headed X-er-x-es crocus when those six boys let fly with cans and bottles and chunks of coal. Ajax stiffened up and defied the lightning for about five seconds. Then the lightning plunked him in about a dozen places at once, and he turned and fled.

"Did ye git what ye were lookin for?" asked the cook as he bounded into the kitchen just ahead of an empty beer bottle. But he did not stop to answer. He was waiting to pour out the vials of his wrath upon Mrs. Bowser. He ascended the lamentent stairs two steps at a time, but when he stood before her he could do no more than gasp and stutter.

HE FLED FOR THE KITCHEN DOOR.

"I wouldn't try to talk if I were you," she soothingly said as she rose up. "Just drop down on the lounge and let me cover you up for awhile. It may be that X-er-x-es was all wrong or that our cat ate up all the blue crocuses this afternoon. Don't worry, however. It won't be long before you can go out and look for the red-headed sunflower!" M. QUAD.

That's the only thing I see
When she dares to don it;
Climax of all witchery
Lies in Beasie's bonnet.

Yet, though I have sung the spell
Oft in many a sonnet,
To this day I cannot tell
One thing that is on it.

Were it off her dainty head,
Who would care to con it?
She's the charm, when all is said,
Of her dainty bonnet.

Call It KIDNEY ACHE

Fort Wayne Citizens Tell Why You

May as well call things by their right name. It is backache, to be sure—but the kidneys are to blame. Too much of a strain on the little filters of the blood. They can't take the uric acid out of the blood—that's where the trouble begins—

You know the rest: backache, headache, urinary troubles, diabetes—and then, Bright's Disease.

Doan's Kidney Pills

are the remedy. Cure kidney troubles of any kind. Are doing it right here in Fort Wayne every day. Fort Wayne people say so. Here is the case of Mrs. W. T. Hume, of 25 East Williams street, wife of a carriagemaker, says: "Mr. Hume procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Meyer Bros. & Co.'s drug store and was greatly benefitted by them. He was much troubled with backache and rheumatism, caused by disordered kidneys. His back was so lame he could hardly stoop and at times it was very painful for him to keep on working. The rheumatism was mostly in his ankles and caused him a great deal of suffering. As soon as he began taking Doan's Kidney Pills these symptoms of kidney trouble commenced to disappear and soon his kidneys were in better condition than they had been for years."

Doan's Kidney Pills are for sale by all druggists---50c a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

KNABE PIANOS

One hundred and fifty landladies have been summoned at Vienna for taking in boarders without the permission of the police.

DON'T START WRONG.

Don't start the summer with a lingering cough or cold. We all know what a "summer cold" is. It's the hardest kind to cure. Often it "hangs on" through the entire season. Take it in hand right now. A few doses of One Minute Cough Cure will set you right. Sure cure for coughs, colds, croup, grip, bronchitis, all throat and lung troubles. Absolutely safe. Acts at once. Children like it. "One Minute Cough Cure is the best cough medicine I ever used," says J. H. Bowles, Groveton, N. H. "I never found anything else that acted so safely and quickly." Meyer Bros. & Co.

The weekly mail to the English army in South Africa is 204,000 letters.

WANTS OTHERS TO KNOW.

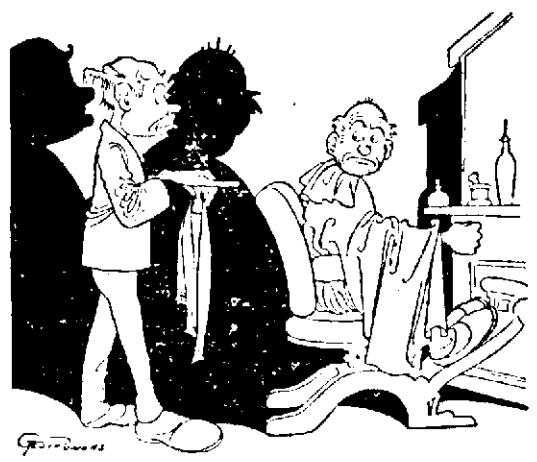
"I have used DeWitt's Little Early Risers for constipation and torpid liver and they are all right. I am glad to indorse them, for I think when we find a good thing we ought to let others know it," writes Alfred Heinze, Quincy, Ill. They never gripe or distress. Sure, safe pills. Meyer Bros. & Co.

THE REASON.



Barber—Your hair is getting rather gray, sir.

Smith (who has just had a bum shave)—It'll be grayer than that before I come in here again.

T. O. SASAWAY, M. D., The Reliable Specialist.
(Established 1897.)

I CURE (TO STAY CURED)

Bricocele, Nervous Debility, Blood Poison and all Vital Weaknesses and Diseases of Men.

VARICOCELE is one of the most prevalent, insidious and serious diseases. The cause is stagnation of blood in the veins, first sign an itching and dragging weight. It is known to the medical profession as a great menace to body and mind. It steals your vitality, robs you of your mental faculties, destroys your ambition. If not cured may end in insanity and death; you must be cured.

DO NOT DESPAIR! Rouse Yourself and Be a Man.

Consult a Specialist who will positively cure you. Delays are dangerous—Tomorrow may be too late.

Dr. Gasaway's Treatment MEANS

RESTORATION

To the Nervous and Circulatory Systems.

VARICOCELE

Nervous Blood and Skin Diseases, Cured to Stay Cured.

Associate Diseases.

In curing a disease of any kind I never fail to remove all reflex complications. If the case is Varicocele, the weakness caused by it disappears. If it is Stricture, and has developed into Prostatic, Bladder or Kidney affections, the injured organs are all restored to a perfectly healthy condition. If it is contagious Blood Poison, any and all Skin, Blood and Bone diseases arising from the taint are entirely and permanently eliminated from the system. If it is Nervous Debility, the many distressing symptoms following in its train and indicating a premature decline of physical and mental power are totally removed and rapidly replaced by the youthful energy of robust manhood. Hence all resulting ills and reflex complications which may be properly termed associate diseases and which, in fact are often more serious than the original ailment that gives rise to them—all, I say—disappear completely and forever with the cure of the main malady.

A Fair Proposition.

When I tell you that I have a positive cure for Nervous Diseases, Varicocele and all Pelvic diseases, and offer to prove to you by documental evidence, that is backed by over 1,000 living testimonials, have you the right to disbelieve the statement without investigating its truth? Is not your health and future happiness worthy of your time and trouble to substantiate the truth of my assertions? When I offer you a thorough personal examination FREE, and then explain to you how I can cure you, how long it will take and how much it will cost you, is it not worth the effort to call; or if you are out of the city, to write me in detail, giving an exact description of your trouble and its present advancement? You will receive by return mail a correct diagnosis of your ailment free. Undoubtedly you have never been examined by a specialist, one who can correctly and minutely explain in simple language your exact condition.
